1. LEANDER: "Ah, May is the month! By Jove, there should be a lot of violets over in that woods."
CHARLEY ONTHESPOT: "Sure! Come, we will go over and pick them."
LULU: "No, the ground is too soggy and wet and my shoes are too thin. You two boys go and I'll sit here until you come back."

2. CHARLEY: "Confound it all! Not a violet in the whole woods."
LEANDER: "By Jove! Do you wonder? Just look at this tramp coming with two big bunches. He has cleaned out the place. Say, Charley, we will buy them from him. Lulu will never know but that we picked them."

3. THE TRAMP: "Sure I'll sell 'em. Dat's wot I picks 'em fer. A dollar a bunch, gents."

4. LEANDER: "Lulu will be delighted with these violets."
CHARLEY: "Yes; she will never suspect"——
POWERFUL FARMER: "Ha, ha! This is where my violets go. You are the ones who have robbed my hot-beds, eh? Well, you're my prisoners. I'm constable of this township. Come with me to th' lockup."

5. POWERFUL FARMER: "Sorry, miss, if these be frien's of yourn, but they've been robbin' my hot-bed of violets, an' they've got to go before th' 'Squire. Come, both of you."
LULU: "Oh, Leander! Oh, Charley! Why did you do such a despicable thing? And I'll have to go home alone. Oh, joy! No, I will not! Here comes dear Lieutenant Sharpnell in his automobile. HE will take care of me."

6. LIEUTENANT SHARPNELL: "I am so glad I can be of service to you, Miss Lulu. Well, good bye, boys. Sorry I haven't the price of the fine with me. I'll send it up just as soon as I can get back to the barracks."
LULU: "Oh, to think of it! Arrested for theft! How could they do such a disgraceful thing? I don't see how either of them can look me in the face again."

MY PET ELEPHANT AND HOW I TRAINED HER

By 14-Year-Old HATTIE SNYDER

Story of the Biggest Pet in the World told by Little Girl Trainer.

I AM proud of having tamed the smartest elephant in America. Hattie is not only the smartest, but the sweetest tempered elephant in the country, and she and I have always been friends. She is named after me. I christened her myself in her stall at the Central Park Zoo.

One night two years ago papa, who has been the animal keeper at the Central Park Zoo for fifteen years and before that was with Barnum and Bailey's Circus, came home and told me that a new elephant had arrived that day from Ceylon, India. He said she was travel-stained and homesick. The next morning I went over with him to the elephant house to see her.

She was very little for an elephant. She did not weigh more than half a ton. So almost before I knew it I had picked up a loaf of bread and carried it into the stall. She gave a funny little squeak of delight and gulped down the bread as though she was starving. I patted her trunk and she squeaked again the queer little squeaking sound as though she was trying to follow the scale on the piano and had jumped a few notes. When papa saw me he didn't know what to do. He told me afterward that it was the worst scare he had in twenty years of animal training.

A Reward of Merit.

But I never was afraid of Hattie for a minute. I knew she wasn't vicious—just lonesome and homesick. After she had been here a week I christened her. A friend and I plaited a wreath of long green grass and put it on her head. The only trouble was that she tried to eat it. Then I broke a bottle of water over her head. Oh, no, it wasn't a big bottle. It didn't hurt her, and when the water ran down over her neck she squeaked that she was pleased. I cracked the bottle first, anyway, so that it wouldn't hurt her when I broke it. When I broke it and the water poured out, I said, as the pretty young ladies say when they baptise the battleships: "I christen thee Hattie." Papa said that when he went to the elephant house next morning she still wore her wreath.

From that time I began to train Hattie. She was very quick and willing, and she would always do what I wanted her to after I made her understand. I had seen papa train Jewel and the other elephants and I commenced with Hattie in the same way.

The first thing was to teach her to stand on her hind legs. No little girl can do this alone. Neither can any little girl's father, even if he is an old animal tamer. So I asked three of the men to help me. We used the block and fall. That is a pulley, which we fastened tightly to the ceiling, for it had to bear a weight of 1,000 pounds without breaking, and with big ropes three inches in diameter running through it. Did I tell you that the same rope, three inches thick, was tied around her front legs? Well, after that we began pulling on the other ends of the rope that had been passed through the pulley. Hattie didn't know what was happening, nor why. But after a little she felt her front feet rising off the ground, and I was beside her saying: "Up! Up! Up!" She looked frightened, but what could she do? There she was going up and up and up, while the pulley creaked and creaked and the man pulled and pulled. All the while I was saying "Up! Up! Up!" and she learned that was what she was to do when I said that particular short word. I told the men not to keep her standing until she was tired, and so after a minute they eased the ropes and she felt herself sinking slowly back to four feet instead of two. When she had got her feet on the ground again she turned her head around and looked at me in the funniest way. You could almost hear her thinking, "What kind of a fool performance is this, anyway?" I patted her trunk and her ear and said: "Nice Hattie. Good girl." Then the men began pulling on the ropes again and up she went once more. We hoisted her and let her rest four times, and that ended the lesson for that day. When we got her back to the stall I gave her two loaves of bread and five apples and petted her a great deal. The next morning we had her out again and used the pulley. She didn't look so frightened this time, although she would turn her head to me to ask what it was all about. But all I would say was "Up! Up! Up!" I never spoke another word to her during the lesson. In two weeks she learned the word so well that her muscles worked like a machine. As soon as I began to say "Up!" her feet rose slowly and in about thirty seconds she was standing on her hind feet and looking down at me as though she knew she had been a good elephant and wanted me to say so. I said "Good Hattie. Good girl," and she came slowly down. She only needed the pulley twice after that to remind her what "Up!" meant.

After she had thoroughly learned to stand on her hind legs I began the next lesson, which sounds harder than it is. I taught Hattie waltzing on a tub. We did not need the pulley for this. It is necessary for the first lesson, standing on the hind legs, but for a waltzing lesson an elephant hook is the only assistant you need.

The elephant hook is a wooden handled prod with two sharp steel points at the end. One point runs the same direction as the handle, and the other turns out at the side. It hurts an elephant about the same as a needle point can hurt us. By poking Hattie's right front foot with the prod I made her understand she was to lift it up. Then, while she was still holding it up obediently, I tapped on the bottom of the overturned tub. She understood and put her foot on the tub. Then I struck the left front foot with the prod and she held it up. I touched the tub and she finally got her left foot on top of it. The hind legs were harder, but she got them all on the tub at last. Then I gave her bread and apples and kissed her trunk. After she got used to getting on the tub I played the harmonica and at the same time kept prodding her feet to make her turn round and round. That lesson took two weeks. Then I gave her the harmonica herself and she learned to play it, but papa says I must not tell how I taught her to do that, for he says that is a strictly professional secret.

Hattie's third lesson was standing on her hind feet on the tub. For this I had to have the block and fall—the pulley, you know—and to ask three men to work the ropes. I stood beside her and said: "Up! Up!" It was just the same as her first lesson, except that she stood on a tub instead of on the ground.

Hattie's first lesson in balancing was to hold up the left front foot and the right hind foot at the same time. Of course I began with the front foot first, for that comes easiest to the beast, and the left because it is harder to balance the right. She would never put down her foot while I said "Up," and so while I was prodding her right hind foot with the hook I kept on saying "Up," so that she would not set down the front one. So she kept up those two feet until I stopped saying "Up." I never left off one lesson for another until she knew the last like a primer.

The trick that naturally followed this one was to teach her to hold up the left front foot and left hind foot at the same time. This was harder than balancing opposite feet, and took twice as much time, because Hattie seemed to have made up her mind that it was an unnatural way to stand and a very silly performance altogether.

The hardest of the three balancing tricks came last. That was standing on the left feet and pointing with the right front and right hind foot. The left feet seem weaker somehow and it takes a long time to learn to shift the weight to such unsteady props. Hattie's left legs used to tremble while I was teaching her that trick. I think she was afraid, poor dear!

The hardest trick for an elephant to learn is walking on the hind feet. Hattie had to put to use two of her first lessons—standing on her hind legs on the ground and standing on her hind legs on the tub. After I had got her standing on her hind legs on the tub I pulled her trunk, saying, "Up! Up!" all the time, so that she would not think she might come down. She stepped down very carefully, for she was afraid of hurting herself. I kept hold of the trunk all the time and kept on saying "Up!" so that she would not come down, and she thought she had to follow the trunk and me. Then I would point the hook the way I wanted her to go and she got to understand. Now she will follow me while I walk backward in front of her, holding the hook horizontally in my hand. Papa calls that trick a morning walk in the park.

Did I tell you that Hattie is just a baby only three years old? And that she just loves animals? There was a lamb that used to go into her stall, and she would catch him up in her trunk and swing him back and forth. He seemed to like it. She is very fond of the two fox terriers, Daisy and Teddy, and lets them ride on her back.

Besides being one of only two elephants in this country that can walk on their hind feet, she can do a cakewalk. While I sang or hummed the tune I prodded her feet until she learned to keep perfect time.

Ready to Shake Hands.

OLD? RICH? YOUNG! POOR?

"DINES · SUMPTUOUSLY · ALONE."

The Very Interesting Question which Is Agitating Debutantes, Match-Making Mammas, Heiresses and Others, Rich And Poor, Now That the Most Eligible Bachelor in the "400" is Seriously Considering Matrimony.

"NO · FLIGHTY · FRIVOLOUS FLIRT · FOR · HIM."

NOT A BIT OLD FOR THE YOUNGEST DEBUTANTE.

ANY plan that a $50,000,000 bachelor unfolds is bound to be interesting even when he is as silent about the purpose of it as the "Silent Smith" himself.

Smith's latest has aroused as much excitement and comment in the smart set to which he belongs as though he had heralded it from the housetops with a blare of trumpets. It agitates young and old of the fair sex, and even some of the sterner ones who happen to be parents, guardians, chaperons, etc.

Concentrated into a single sentence—Fifty Million Dollar Smith is going to remain in America this Summer.

He is going to entertain in Newport as lavishly as he has entertained in New York. To do so in a fashion worthy his fame he has rented for the season the Frederick Vanderbilt residence.

What does it mean? Why is Millionaire Smith not going abroad as is his Summer custom? Why does he prefer America this Summer to Europe? Why? Why? Why?

The air is full of questions and conjectures.

The most absorbing, exciting of them all announces that James Henry Smith, designated universally on this occasion as Fifty Million Dollar Smith, is on the hunt for a wife—a still hunt, of course.

They say, you know there are always plenty of spokesmen, that he has been a silent observer all Winter in New York and now he purposes to be a silent observer all Summer in Newport.

The report is that he purposes to find the right sort of a woman to preside over his splendid New York house, the house on Fifth avenue that belonged to the late W. C. Whitney, and, incidentally, over his heart.

The right sort of a woman! There you have the point that is agitating the world of society. What sort of a woman is she? What sort is the right sort? A woman of forty or a girl of eighteen? A young girl? A widow? A divorcee? A spinster? A woman of the world, or a debutante? An heiress, surrounded by suitors, or some portionless miss who is loved for herself alone? Who?

"You see," explained one of them, "Mr. Smith's silence is so eloquent that when you review your conversations with him you find you have done all the talking. So just what sort of a woman he regards as the right woman—well, I guess only she knows!"

The Enigmatic Woman.

But the fact remains that this year Millionaire Smith will make only a flying trip abroad. He will sail on May 16, immediately after the coaching parade, in which he will take a prominent part, and he will return early in July, arriving in Newport at the same time as Mrs. Astor.

This is unprecedented. Hitherto Mr. Smith has remained abroad until late in the Fall, giving yachting parties to notable people, entertaining splendidly at his seat in the Scottish Highlands, or taking car loads of guests over to Paris to see the new things at the theatres. Never before has he spent a season at Newport.

Is the right woman to be there? Why else should Millionaire Smith relinquish his habit of years to live in a hired house? Why?

If it takes all Summer the Newport colony is going to find out. Meanwhile, you can't blame them for speculating—indeed, they wouldn't be human if they did not.

Smith's fortune when his uncle died some six years ago was computed to be in the neighborhood of fifty millions. Since then it has gone up, up with such lucky investments as rich men may make, so that to-day he ranks as the seventh richest man in America.

And he is a bachelor! He is somewhat over fifty, perhaps fifty-two. Not a bit too old for the youngest debutante that ever smiled—in the case of this particular Smith. If he were an ordinary Smith, with an ordinary amount of money, of course, it would be different. From the comments and conjectures that one hears the question is not "What woman will consent?" but "What woman will be asked?"

To whom will Millionaire Smith's fancy turn? To arrive at a conclusion he is discussed from every point of view.

"When a man is well along in years like dear Mr. Smith," says the woman of forty, "naturally he wants a companion. Ah, he may flirt and joke with the young girls, but, believe me, when he settles down he will select one who has settled down, too. No flighty, frivolous flirt for him."

To substantiate the claim of the woman of forty she points to such a man as William K. Vanderbilt.

"Look at his wife!" she cries. "Now he is a typical man of sense, as dear Mr. Smith is. Mrs. Vanderbilt has grey hair, quite properly. She has grown sons, of course. Men of brains nowadays want women of the world to preside over their hearthstones, women who know how to talk and entertain."

Over their tea the leaders of the Six Hundred, some of them eligible through the misfortunes of divorce or death, discuss the future of Smith—also, of course, the fortune.

"Such an amount of money demands a woman of the world at the helm."

"You never can tell," quoted a sprightly mother.

"My dear," said the widow with decision, "debutantes can't talk, heaven bless them, and Smith must marry some one who can talk!"

For the day at least Smith seemed to be disposed of to the older generation.

The next day the younger generation took his fate in hand.

"Heard about Jimmy Smith?" said one.

"Mamma says"——

"Yes, so does mamma"——

"Well, what do you think?"

"He's fifty if he's a day!"

"Oh, I don't mind that—I could go out without him."

"M—yes. I heard some one say to some one that he likes the older set. What do you think of that?"

"Nonsense! How could he?"

"Well, they say, you know, he doesn't like to talk to himself—he wants some one who can talk for him."

"Well, if that's all, I can do that. Mamma says that I can say more words in a minute"——

"Oh, not that kind—conversation."

It is currently reported that these two girls didn't speak to each other again for a whole day. There were, however, others to continue the discussion.

"Who do you think it will be?" said one.

"Surely, no middle-aged person of thirty," cried another in disgust.

"Never. Why, look at Senator Clark, a man with grown daughters and grandchildren. He's the right sort—just like dear, nice Mr. Smith. His wife wasn't over eighteen when he married her"——

The Debutantes Admire Him

"And poor!" said one of the set, who is not an heiress.

"M—yes—of course—he might—but one thing you can be sure of—he will certainly not marry one of those old fogies who wants her tea in the afternoon and who has given up playing tennis because it—she has sprained her arm; you know the excuse they always give!"

"Dearest, you are quite right. Mr. Smith is a man of brains. He wants, of course, a young girl whom he can mould. Hem!"

"Catch him moulding you!"

"Don't be irrelevant—he wont know that till after—long after. He's a man of the world himself—what should he want with a woman of the world?"

"Well, indeed? Well, I'm to have some of the loveliest gowns this season—papa says its worth while"——

"So does mamma"——

"Unlimited carte blanche, you know"——

"M—me, too"——

All these preparations and comments may intimidate the silent Smith if they come to his ears. On the other hand, he has braced up under similar ones many a time before now. A year ago it was currently reported that the beautiful widow, Mrs. Samuel Sloan Chauncey, sister of Lady Newborough, had captivated him. Then there were hints of Mrs. Ogden Goelet. He bore them all bravely, and never once broke into speech until some one congratulated him upon being engaged to Miss Greta Pomeroy. On that occasion he cried: "Out of regard for the lady—no!"

HOW WILL IT HAPPEN?

One thing is certain. The Newport season promises to be unusually interesting and unusually gay.

At the end of Bellevue avenue, at the point where the cliffs sweep boldly off to the westward, in the great brownstone edifice facing the sea, known as "Rough Point," the silent millionaire is sure to assist by entertaining extensively.

How Will He Propose?

"How do you suppose he'll ever do it?" asked a debutante the other day.

"What, entertain?" exclaimed her dearest confidante.

"No, you goose—propose."

"Oh, yes, he'll have to say a lot, wont he?"

"Well, he'll have to convey to her at least that he loves her."

"That's sometimes done without words," said the most learned.

"I know, but you can't be sure—my dear"—this was said with sudden consternation—"that's where our elders have the advantage of us. They understand how to lead a man on—help him out, they call it."

"Ah, yes; that's where experience counts, but just give me one reason"——

So speculation as to Smith seesaws. One moment the stock of the girl goes up, the next the woman seems to have the advantage. It's the skill of one against the freshness of the other.

What is the attraction that keeps him here this year? Or, rather, who is it?

The manners of Mr. Smith are full of the eccentricities that a millionaire may have. Some of them he is said to inherit from the Uncle George, who has so nobly permitted their cultivation.

He lives alone absolutely except for his servants. At Tuxedo and in New York all last Winter his two establishments were kept in perfect running order. He might drop in at either. If he happened to strike the dinner hour, he would find at either place the dinner table set, the kitchen range heaped with delicacies, a chef in attendance, a butler in livery and nineteen other servants ready to do his bidding. In each establishment any number of bedrooms awaited his pleasure, for it is one of his peculiarities—one singularly befitting a millionaire—to sleep in any room that may strike his fancy. All rooms, therefore, in the huge Whitney mansion and the Tuxedo home, and now also probably in the rented Vanderbilt estate, are kept in perfect readiness always to receive the master. His orders are that his various dwellings are to be maintained exactly as though he were living in all of them at the same time.

The one thing that may be discouraging to his future bride is the fact that Mr. Smith is a worshipper of solitude. Night after night he dines alone in silence, luxuriously, sumptuously, but alone. He is willing to come out of his shell for big entertainments, but sociability, as he understands it, he disdains.

Possibly he may feel differently when he has a wife. But what sort of a wife is such a man likely to choose? Young? Middle-aged? Rich? Poor?

"Silent" Smith has set society guessing. At Newport this Summer it promises to be the great enigma till solved by Smith himself.

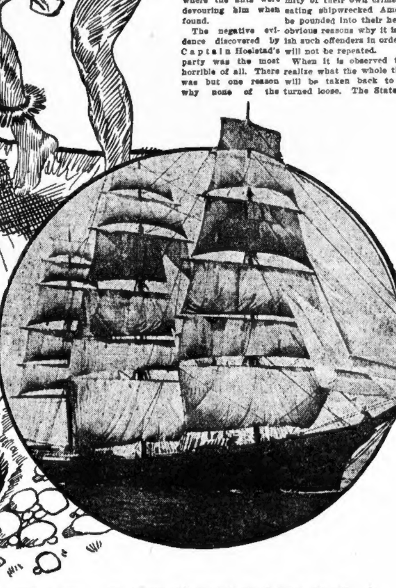
CAN'T UNDERSTAND WHY WE OBJECT TO BEING MURDERED

But the United States Government Has Devised a Scheme to Let a Great Light Into the Brutal Heads of Savages of Botel Tobago Island.

Miss Helen Piper, the captain's niece, who was rescued from the savages.

"This was the fate the ingeniously cruel natives had planned for William Rainewald—to be eaten alive by ants in a stone covered pit."



The Ill-Fated Ship Benjamin Sewall, Under Full Sail.

Washington, May 4.

THE strangest plan of retribution for savage murder on record has just been arranged between the United States and the Japanese governments. The culprits are densely ignorant cannibal savages of the island of Botel Tobago, near Formosa, which belongs to Japan. In October, 1903, they brutally tortured and murdered nine of the shipwrecked crew of the ship Sewall, from Damariscotta, Me., and ate some of them.

This Government promptly demanded of Japan the punishment of the murderers. Japan answered promptly and politely. The State correspondence which ensued makes a curious and most interesting page for history.

"You must punish these murderers of our citizens," said the United States, in effect.

"Certainly," replied Japan. "What means of punishment do you suggest?"

"The crime was murder," we replied; "let the punishment fit the crime."

Japan was cheerfully and politely willing, but there was a difficulty.

"These Botel Tobago Islanders are densely ignorant savages. They have always murdered anybody shipwrecked on their island. That's their way. They don't know any better. Will you please suggest how they can be made to understand why they are being punished?"

This was something of a poser for the State Department. Of course, it was no use punishing murderers who had always murdered, and their grandfathers before them, and didn't know any better. The first principle of punishment requires that the culprit should know what it is all about, and the second is the deterrent effect of that punishment upon others. If the murderers themselves didn't know what it was about, and the rest of these murderous islanders couldn't understand it any better, what object would be gained by killing off a few of them?

White Women Narrowly Escaped.

The State Department has now found a way out of these difficulties; it is a most surprising and remarkable solution of the problem. In order to fully appreciate it a brief account of the crime appears necessary.

The unfortunate ship Sewall, commanded by Captain H. J. Hoelstad, had sailed from Maine to Singapore, and thence for Shanghai, with a cargo of iron-wood, and was caught in a typhoon. She was totally dismasted and the crew had to leave her.

When it became necessary to take to the boats Captain Hoelstad commanded one and First Mate Stenke the other. In the captain's boat were his wife and his eighteen-year-old niece, Helen Piper, besides some members of the crew.

In the mate's boat were the pretty Japanese wife of the third mate and nine of the crew. Both boats were practically without water or provisions. It was necessary that they should find land within a day or two at most.

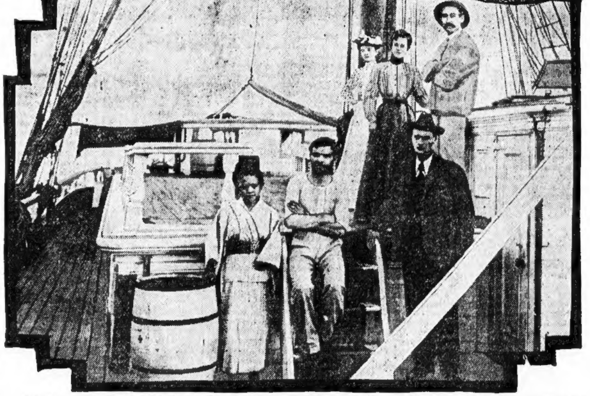
Captain Hoelstad believed the civilized and hospitable Japanese island of Formosa to be within a few hours' rowing distance. He ordered the boats to make in that direction. Unfortunately during the first night the boats became separated.

In a Terrible Plight.

Early the next morning the captain sighted land. At first he believed it was Formosa, and the sailors pulled with a will. But when a few miles distant Captain Hoelstad saw indications which convinced him that the island was not Formosa, but Botel Tobago. He knew then that Formosa lay fifty miles distant, and changed the course in that direction. His wife and niece were bitterly disappointed, being almost without food or water.

"For heaven's sake, let us go ashore," they begged. "We would rather suffer any death on land than continue any longer in this little boat."

A Native Warrior of Botel Tobago.



Unfortunates aboard the Benjamin Sewall, some of whom were drowned, others murdered and others rescued. Reading from right to left in the upper row—Captain Hoelstad, Mrs. Hoelstad, Miss Helen Piper. Lower row—Second Mate Stenke, Third Mate Pickle and his Japanese wife, Oisa.

Captain Hoelstad knew enough about what was to be expected of the natives to resist these appeals. Four days later, in a plight that was terrible indeed, they landed on the coast of Formosa, and were befriended by the Japanese.

Believing that probably the mate had mistaken Botel Tobago for Formosa and landed there, Captain Hoelstad induced a Japanese coasting vessel having a brave and well armed crew to take his party aboard and sail to the neighboring savage island in search of the other members of his party.

On the shore of Botel Tobago, just at the spot where Captain Hoelstad figured that the mate might have beached his boat, they found fragments of it. Half-naked natives were all about. Confronted by this large and strongly armed party, they appeared very friendly. But they attempted to mislead the searchers.

The latter, however, proceeded inland, guided by tracks, plainly not those of natives, and soon learned the horrible truth. The moment the mate and his party had landed the natives were upon them with spears. They stripped the eleven occupants of the boat of all of their clothing, punched the boat itself full of holes and capsized in the water. A negro, a Chinese cook and the mate were drowned almost immediately. The Japanese women could not swim, and she and her husband, the third mate, were drowned together.

Julian Sallo, a member of the crew, swam for a solitary rock, thus saving his life, being taken off by the rescuers. The remainder of the party had been driven inland to meet their awful fate. Exactly what that fate was will never be known, but judging from the condition in which William Rainewald was found it calls for the severest punishment the Japanese authorities can inflict.

Eaten by Swarms of Ants.

After hunting through nearly every hut on the island the searchers came upon the trail of a single white man who had evidently been dragged along by several savages. The natives tried to prevent the party from following this trail to its end, but Captain Hoelstad was not to be detained. Presently they came to a deep pit, partly covered by a heavy stone.

The stone being moved away, in the bottom of the pit the searchers saw William Rainewald lying entirely naked and covered with sores and blisters from head to foot.

His shoulders were a mass of raw flesh owing to abuse he had received. Voracious red ants were crawling all over him. This was the fate the ingeniously cruel natives had planned for William Rainewald—to be slowly eaten alive by ants in a stone-covered pit.

After relating the facts already set forth, Rainewald told how the natives had first used him as a slave. They gave him nothing whatever to wear, and fed him on just enough sweet potato and water to keep the breath of life in him. He was compelled to cut wood on the hill and carry it down to the village on his bare shoulders. The man shuddered with terror and wept as he told his story. He had lost all recollection of how he had come to be placed in the pit where the ants were devouring him when found.

The negative evidence discovered by Captain Hoelstad's party was the most horrible of all. There was but one reason why none of the bodies of the drowned members of the crew had been washed ashore as fragments of the riddled boat had been. The natives were cannibals. They had recovered these bodies immediately and eaten them.

Their appetites for human food being satiated for the present, they had made a slave of William Rainewald, and the cruelties practised upon him having made him undesirable food after their horrible appetites had returned to them, they put him into the pit to be food for ants.

Ate the Bodies of the Drowned.

These details sufficiently explain Japan's reluctance to waste punishment upon creatures plainly so unable to understand and profit by it. The State Department at Washington, after several months' reflection, came to a very logical decision, whereupon this remarkable correspondence with the Japanese Government was resumed.

"Very well," we said to Japan, "since these savages are too ignorant to profit by just punishment, then you must educate them up to it."

Was ever such a situation before heard of? Japan received the suggestion cheerfully and asked:

"What method of education as a preliminary to punishment would you suggest?"

Upon this the State Department outlined to Japan the very ingenious and logical plan which that country has cheerfully consented to adopt. This is the idea:

Japan will send a squad of soldiers in a boat to the island of Botel Tobago, seize a dozen of the leading men of this cannibal tribe and carry them back to Japan as prisoners. While in prison they will be given daily lessons until they can understand the Japanese language.

Then, when it is possible to reach the intelligence of the prisoners, they will be given a course of general ethics, told how the civilized world abhors murder and cannibalism, and what it does to prevent such crimes.

This course will take up considerable time, as it will have to include a general knowledge of geography and the habits and customs of people who inhabit different parts of the globe. After this the special enormity of their own crime in murdering and eating shipwrecked American sailors will be pounded into their heads, together with obvious reasons why it is necessary to punish such offenders in order that such crimes will not be repeated.

When it is observed that the prisoners realize what the whole thing is about they will be taken back to their island and turned loose. The State Department—and the Japanese Government agrees with it—assumes that these newly educated savages will immediately go buzzing about their island, telling of the wonderful things they have learned. In this way the whole tribe will be made to understand how wicked they are and how, if they do such things any more, they are sure to suffer for it.

Educated to Receive Punishment.

When it is considered that enough time has elapsed to allow these sentiments to sink deep into these savage hearts, Japan will send back to the island another squad of soldiers, who will seize and publicly execute half of the number of their former pupils for the crime charged against them, taking care to leave the remainder at liberty to go about among their fellows during the rest of their lives, telling all about it over and over again and discountenancing further torture, murder and eating of strangers stranded on their shore.

How long it will take to complete the job of education, for the sake of logical and useful punishment, is not now known. But the Japanese Government promises to set about the preliminaries at once.

Light-minded persons probably will view this whole enterprise as the finest comic-opera opportunity ever furnished by real life. Anything that is done to naked savages or other natives of unfamiliar countries is material for comic opera. One can imagine the glee with which W. S. Gilbert would represent a cannibal chief studying his a, b, c's in order that he might be executed with an intelligent understanding of the wherefore of his taking off.

To more serious minds the situation will be received as marking a new phase of missionary work. Heretofore powerful governments have not indulged officially in that philanthropic task. They have given independent missionaries some encouragement, and when the latter have created in their savage proteges a taste for the luxuries of civilization have hastened to supply them at profitable prices.

Florence, Italy, April 29.

IN an obscure street near Poggio Imperiale, in the suburbs of Florence, is located just now the principal scene of the most astonishing and pathetic drama the wide world has to offer.

There, in a modest little house, lives a princess of the blood, the divorced wife of a king, with two servants and her baby girl. Never, day or night, does she allow the royal baby out of her sight for an instant. Like any mother in humble life, she takes the child out for a walk on pleasant days, but not with the trustfulness of ordinary mothers.

The first glimpse of a stranger is enough to cause her to take the little princess in her arms and hold her close until the stranger had disappeared. It is a common thing to see her—who might now be a queen—carrying her loved little one "pick-a-back" for blocks, while the expression on her face seems to say:

"My child is my own. Whoever takes her from me will first leave me lifeless."

Whom does she fear? Who would take her child from her?

The answer is, the King of Saxony, her former husband, whose spies and would-be kidnappers are all about her, as she has reason to know. For this royal mother is Louise of Saxony, who ran away from the frigid and unbearably gross and stupid court at Dresden with M. Giron, the tutor of her sons, three years ago while her husband was still only crown prince, and the royal battle for this royal baby, born six months later, is the latest development of the long legal wrangle.

To Kidnap the Little Princess.

It is only within the last two months that the former Crown Princess of Saxony has known that her divorced husband, now the King, succeeding the late King George, had determined to completely humiliate and ostracise her from all her royal connections by separating her from her baby—the only one of seven of whom she is mother whom she has seen but once since her elopement, or whom she now hopes ever to see again.

Possession of little Princess Anne Monica Pia of Saxony—who, in spite of all that has happened, is still in direct line of succession to the throne of Saxony—enabled her to demand and gain concessions from her husband when he became King. When the divorce was granted she was able to obtain an allowance sufficient to support herself and the little Princess in comfort.

Assuming the title of the Countess of Montignoso, which is one of her several rightful titles, accepting the decree of the court and of the King, separating finally from the one man she loved, and giving up all hope of ever seeing again her other children, so closely guarded at Dresden, a year ago she leased the Villa Papiniano, a comfortable residence in Florence, and settled down to devote herself wholly to the care of her baby.

All went well till about two months ago. The mother who might now be Queen of Saxony seemed happy. The baby was healthy, with the lively spirits of her mother, and the Countess herself had regained much of the beauty of which her troubles had robbed her.

Suddenly she was made to realize that while the little Princess was with her there was no security for her peace anywhere in this world. Italian villas are places of hospitality. It was easy for some unexpected enemy, emissary of the King, in disguise to visit her and make himself free of the grounds, and this is what happened.

Hospitality for Her Enemies.

Two men with carefully prepared credentials intending to convince the Countess that they were powerful adherents of her cause at the Dresden Court were entertained by her. They manifested enthusiastic affection for the little Princess, and the Countess talked unreservedly with them about her plans.

It was the Countess's custom to have a romp with the child among the garden shrubberies late in the afternoon, shortly befor the dinner hour. Her guests lunched with her. They know about the daily garden romp. But, with ostentatious particularity, they told how and why they must leave Florence in an hour or two, and when luncheon was over they made ceremonious adieux and departed.

The Countess had no reason to believe that they were not what they represented themselves to be. She knew that many thousands of her country men and women were her stanch friends. She was entirely unsuspecting, and rather regretted that her visitors could not have made a longer stay.

That afternoon the romp in the garden was even merrier and more animated than usual. Princess Anne Monica Pia was proud of her ability to run about on the grass and play hide and seek with her mother among the shrubberies. Their sport was care free and quite riotous.

The grounds of the Villa Papiniano are easy of access from the streets in half a dozen places, and some of the shrubberies are dense enough to afford ample concealment for any one disposed to conceal himself there. Such clumps at quite a little distance from the villa were selected by the wilful little Princess in which to hide from her pursuing mother—and the child was not pleased to be discovered too easily.

It was a stupid piece of business on the part of the Countess's guests at luncheon, for it was the boot of one of them incautiously thrust too far out of his place of concealment over which the child stumbled, falling at full length. The Countess was near enough to pick her up instantly—and to see the telltale boot before it could be withdrawn. Still unsuspicious, but indignant, she commanded:

Caught Them in Her Garden.

"Come out! Who dares hide in my garden? Come out before I cry for assistance."

Thereupon the two guests appeared, voluble with brazen excuses—knowing that they had made a mess of the whole plot to kidnap the little Princess. But instantly the Countess realized how she had been deceived. Shielding the child with one arm, she pointed the pistol which she always carries at the two culprits, while her eyes flashed fire, and said:

"Ah! at last you are properly introduced. Now I know you. Leave my garden! If you dare lay a hand on the Princess your blood will be on the head of your contemptible master, the King!"

At that the fellows made off and were seen no more in that neighborhood. Their usefulness as the King's royal kidnappers was now destroyed, but the Countess knew very well that such material was not lacking.

She was no longer unsuspicious. She realized that this was the last great battle she had to fight with the King of Saxony—a subtle battle in the dark with kidnapping emissaries of a powerful monarch, with the only loved one left her for the prize.

In spite of her troubles the Countess is still a spirited and determined woman. She knew that the only way she could retain possession of the Princess was virtually to hold her night and day close to her own bosom, and avoid every locality where it would be possible for the child to be torn from her arms by force and carried away.

Like a Mother of the People.

It has been reported that the Countess and her child left the Villa Papiniano, leasing it to an American, for reasons of economy. Certainly they went direct from the handsome villa to a little house in the suburbs, but the object was not economy. The shrewd mother knew that the more humble her surroundings the more perfectly she could seclude herself from the outside world.

In the little house on the open road, where there were few trees and no shrubbery to speak of, and where she would need to have no one near but her two perfectly trustworthy Italian peasant servants, it would be difficult for the King's spies to find a pretext to approach her.

"I will be like a poor mother of the people," the Countess said to Teresa, her one maid. "At night my child shall sleep in my arms; its slightest movement will awaken me. When we walk out it will be in the open road when the sun shines. We will walk hand in hand, and if any stranger approaches I will pick up the Princess and shield her in my bosom. No one shall take her away from me!"

And this is how the Countess and her baby, a Princess who may become Queen of Saxony, are now living. The little Princess, a merry child, thinks it perfectly delightful to be carried about "pick-a-back" by her mother. But her constant watchfulness is wearing on the Countess. To thoughtful persons who have caught glimpses of these scenes they are scenes in a tragedy.

The royal battle between the King of Saxony and the woman who now should be his Queen, which has developed into an underground war in the dark for possession of a princess royal, has been fought on many fields. Its main camps have been in Dresden, in Geneva—whither the Countess when she was Crown Princess fled with Giron, the tutor of her sons—in the Isle of Wight, where the mother of a new-born Princess took refuge from her enemies, and here in Florence.

She Feared Life Imprisonment.

The late King George of Saxony was bitter against the woman who had so outraged his smugly respectable court with its rotten core. It was he who prevented any reconciliation, and who insisted on the divorce which the Crown Prince really did not want. Half a dozen times since his death efforts to restore the erring Princess to her former position have nearly succeeded.

To her the inducement was not her position at court, which she thoroughly despised, but to be placed again with her sons and daughters. The inducement in the new King's mind was the prevention of further scandal and the possession of the Princess born after the Crown Princess's flight. But all through these negotiations there was before the mental vision of Louise a trick of her powerful enemies to rob her of everything and force her to end her days in confinement, charged with the crime of insanity.

Fled to England for Safety.

Probably she was right in this. The Kaiser was outraged by her behavior, as were all her imperial relatives in Austria. In fact, every powerful person interested would have been glad to have her lost from sight and mind of the world henceforth. So she fought to retain every possible advantage, for the privilege of seeing her children in Dresden—which she gained—and to be allowed to retain absolute possession of her last born child, with an income sufficient for their support.

Legally, the battle ended shortly after the birth of little Princess Monica Pia. The Emperor of Austria and the King of Saxony met at Vienna and decided that Louise should not be allowed to live either in Austria or Saxony—outside of a sanitarium. They further agreed that she should have an income of $6,000 yearly and possession of her new-born child for three months.

The child was born at Lindau, and the Saxon Court Commissioner was in the next room, so that there should be a witness that the child was really Louise's. This fact was duly attested and the baby was sent to Dresden, where it slept in the same cradle that had sheltered the other sons and daughters of Louise and her husband, now the King. A few weeks later the Countess, keeping her own counsel, took the child away to England. She knew that the King did not trust her to give it up at the expiration of three months.

In fact, she knew that the King had given instructions to kidnap the little Princess. Her watchfulness alone interfered. When she established herself in Italy for a while she believed that the King had given over his kidnapping designs. She began to regain her spirits and her beauty. She played and sang again and wrote verses. Her poetical talent is well developed. Not long after her elopement a volume of her poems, including some love songs, was published in Germany. One of the latter, "You Alone, Louise," was supposed to have been contributed by Giron.

Now the Countess is undeceived about the King's intentions. She clasps the little Princess to her bosom, knowing full well that only there can she keep her for herself. It is a tragedy of real life with a royal mother for the heroine.

King Frederick of Saxony.

A Novel Invention Is a New Ice Chest Without Any Ice.

ICE, the disorderly visits of the iceman and the exactions of the Ice Trust—those hot weather worries of all housewives—are shortly to be put to flight by a neat little machine taking up no more space than a couple of bottles of seltzer. Such is the promise of the manufacturers of the new cold storage device now used by grocers and butchers in their large refrigerators in place of blocks of ice.

This cold-producing machine has already been sufficiently condensed in size for use in large households where the refrigerator has generous dimensions. It has many recommendations. It is colder, cleaner, more convenient and cheaper than ice, and the original outlay is by no means prohibitive. The ordinary ice box size is promised for the coming Summer.

This complete cold-storage plant, consisting of an electric motor and compressor, can be tucked away in a small compartment at one end of the ice box, while the space usually taken up by ice is used as a tank for brine, by means of which the motor apparatus cools the whole interior of the box.

The motor needs to be in action only a part of the day. It soon so chills the brine that the latter will maintain a very low temperature for several hours. When the temperature begins to rise, or a greater degree of cold is desired, all that is necessary is to turn on the motor again. In large grocery stores fitted with the new device the motor is in action only during the ordinary hours of business.

The advantages noted in these cases are just the ones that will most appeal to housewives, when the apparatus has been adapted to small ice chests. Not only is it more economical in comparison with the weekly ice bill, while producing a lower temperature than ice, but it is infinitely more cleanly. There is nothing about the machine or the tank of brine to contaminate the contents of the refrigerator, and the confusion of the iceman's daily visits is done away with.

The matter of electrical connections for the motor is not difficult, as the power required to run the small motor is available wherever there are electric light wires.

Who John Paul Jones Was.

EVERY American schoolboy knows that John Paul Jones was the greatest sea fighter ever produced by any country, and that he was the real father of the United States Navy. They know that John Paul Jones never yielded to but one adversary—death.

Over in England in the last quarter of the eighteenth century parents used the names of two men with which to frighten their mischievous children into good behavior. These men were John Paul Jones and Napoleon. In the year 1777 their preference in the way of a living ogre was John Paul Jones. When they said, "Be good or John Paul Jones will get you," it was not necessary to say more.

This was because for three years all the British sea fighters on their ships in the waters surrounding England, Scotland and Ireland were in a continuous panic over the way the American naval captain appeared to be everywhere at once with his little fleet, sinking English ironclads and capturing no end of other vessels. It was the greatest thing any man could do to make King George sick of trying to stop the American Revolution.

How everybody in England feared and detested the unconquerable American naval captain was shown in many popular songs of the period. That is the last proof of any man's greatness—when the people sing songs about him. Naturally the English songs were a pack of lies, but that does not alter their significance. One of the most popular was by a schoolmaster—Hackston was his name. Here are some sample stanzas:

> You've all heard of Paul Jones, have you not, have you not?
>   You've all heard of Paul Jones, have you not?
> You've all heard of Paul Jones, who in Galloway was born.
> A rogue and a vagabond, is he not, is he not?
>   A rogue and a vagabond, is he not?
>
> He took the Serapis, did he not, did he not?
> He took the Serapis, though the battle it was hot—
>   But a rogue and vagabond is he not?
> The French King does him uphold, he robs for British gold.
>   He's a pirate bold, is he not?

Born an English Subject.

It is true that, like many loyal Americans to-day, John Paul Jones was born a subject of the King of England. The place was the small town of Arbigland, Scotland, and the date July 6, 1747. When he was twelve years old he was apprenticed to a Scotch merchant who traded with America, and thus he learned about this country and resolved to seek his fortune here. In 1773 he carried that resolution into effect.

In 1775 the son of John Paul, a Scotch gardener, who had assumed the surname of Jones, became a lieutenant of the American navy, and was placed in command of the sloop Providence. In the next six weeks he captured no less than sixteen prizes—and his name was familiar to King George.

"Paul Jones, the devil of the seas," the outraged English said.

This was only the beginning. When the American frigate Alfred, Captain Saltonstall, commander, came to anchor at the foot of Walnut street to receive the new and first continental flag—bearing the figure of a pine tree and a rattlesnake in a field of thirteen stripes, with the significant legend, "Don't tread on me"—it was Lieutenant John Paul Jones who flew to the ropes and it was his hand that sent it flying to the masthead.

The Scourge of English Shipping.

A year later, in command of a squadron of three or four small wooden ships, he became the scourge of British shipping in the English Channel and off the coasts of Ireland and Scotland. Prize after prize he captured. The English were outraged, and the helpless British naval authorities were bursting with indignation and chagrin. When the latter thought they had Paul Jones he would slip away in a fog—and take more prizes.

It was inevitable that, sooner or later, Paul Jones's little fleet would have to stand and fight the strongest squadron the English could bring into range of him. This did not occur, however, till Paul Jones had been called to Paris and placed in command of the Bonhomme Richard. Then he was ready for a decisive action. Instead of the British hunting him, he was now hunting British men-of-war.

On September 23, 1779, while the Bonhomme Richard was pursuing a prize off the coast of Yorkshire, the big English ships-of-war Serapis and Scarborough appeared, putting out to sea with a convoy of merchantmen. Post haste the English captains sent the merchantmen scuttling back to port, while they gave chase to their terrible enemy. It was dark, except for a bright moon, when they came within hailing distance.

"What ship is that?" hailed the Serapis.

It was a ruse to enable her to get closer. Presently a different answer came—a tearing broadside. Just before this the Pallas had captured the Scarborough. The ensuing battle was a duel between the Bonhomme Richard and the Serapis, the latter in every way the better ship, her superior manoeuvring ability enabling her to make a sieve of the Bonhomme Richard's hull with her eighteen-pound shot before Commodore Jones could take the extraordinary action which rendered this sea fight unique.

"I Haven't Begun to Fight Yet."

The Bonhomme Richard was actually sinking when the bowsprit of the Serapis, sweeping over her stern, was grappled and lashed so that when the adversaries swung together, stem to stern, the muzzles of the guns of each were thrust against the sides of the other. Through an accident the Bonhomme Richard had struck her colors. Not knowing this, Paul Jones was amazed to hear Commodore Pearson, of the Serapis, shout the question:

"Has your ship struck?"

"I haven't begun to fight yet," thundered the American Commodore.

Thereupon the guns of both ships tore at each other's vitals. They could not be reloaded, so close were the ships lashed together. Fortunately, shots from the Bonhomme Richard carried away the Serapis's mainmast. Then what was left of the former's crew followed Paul Jones aboard the English ship—and it was all over.

The world heard of it with amazement. Congress gave Paul Jones a medal, and President Washington wrote him a letter of thanks.

The year 1790 found him penniless in Paris, his promised Russian pension unpaid and Congress thoughtless about prize money he should have had.

One morning—July 18, 1792—he was found lying on his bed face down, dressed in his American commodore's uniform, dead—dead from the effects of his wounds and neglected disease. Paris friends gave him decent and honored burial. A dozen years later even the name of the cemetery in which his body had been laid to rest was forgotten in his own country. And when, in 1871, the archives of Paris were destroyed by the commune, the chance of that body ever being located was indeed slender.

Paris, April 29.

PARIS is alive with interest in the relic of relics and eager to pay homage to a new lion, and both are American. People of all classes seek opportunity to view the leaden casket in which the body of John Paul Jones, the American naval hero, lay lost and forgotten for more than a hundred years, and the name of its discoverer—Ambassador Horace Porter—is on every lip.

Every one marvels that Ambassador Porter has been able to accomplish the apparently hopeless task he set for himself. The story of his five years' quest and its happy denouement is told everywhere. No enterprise reflecting credit upon the United States has received anything like the amount of favorable comment that this one has—in Frenchmen's eyes the last thing to be expected of Americans, because based upon pure sentiment.

For five years Paris has watched Ambassador Porter's efforts to remove this reproach from his country. It admired him when he refused to be daunted by the fact that during the Commune every record likely to throw light on the place of Paul Jones's burial were destroyed. Some laughed when he appealed to Congress for official aid in continuing his search, but they have never laughed at Ambassador Porter. It was most interesting news two years ago when the fact was published that M. de Ricaudy, the archaeologist, had resurrected in the attic of an ancient church a bundle of old letters naming the abandoned Paris cemetery, and nearly locating the spot of Paul Jones's burial.

Upon this spot for more than a century had stood the house No. 1 Rue des Ecluses Saint-Martin. At the time of Paul Jones's death, 1792, a small Protestant cemetery had occupied this ground. A few years later it had been given up to building purposes.

This information increased Ambassador Porter's hopes a hundred fold. He knew that there would be no difficulty in identifying the remains of John Paul Jones. It had always been remembered that he was buried in a leaden casket, which should preserve its contents indefinitely, together with articles of his American Commodore's outfit known to have been buried with him. Besides there existed an exact record of Paul Jones's height and other physical peculiarities and of his wounds.

The means whereby to identify the remains of Paul Jones had been copied by some patriotic Americans from the records which were burned during the Commune. Curiously those making excerpts neglected the most important item—the place of burial. That being, fortunately, now revealed, these excerpts furnished all else required. They read as follows:

The Record of Paul Jones's Death.

"This 20th day of July, 1792, Year IV. of Liberty and the Year I. of Equality, at 8 o'clock in the evening, in conformity with the decree of the National Assembly of yesterday, in the presence of a deputation from the said Assembly, consisting of Messrs. Brun, President of the Deputation; Branet, Cambon, Rouyer, Brival, Doydier, Gay-Vernou, Bishop of the Department of Haute Vienne; Chabot, Vicar Apostolic of the Department of Loir-et-Cher, and a deputation from the Consistory of Paris Protestants composed of Messrs. Marron, Pastor and Perraud, Benard, Mouquin, Empaytas, Elders, was buried John Paul Jones, native of England and a citizen of the United States of America, first naval officer of the said States, aged forty-five years; died the 18th of this month at his residence, situated Rue de Tournon, 42, from dropsy of the chest, in the sentiments of the Protestant faith.

"The said interment was made in our presence, Rene Francois Sardonneau, King's Commissary, etc."

Another fragment of a record mentioned the fact that he was buried in a leaden coffin bearing his name and titles on a brass plate, and that on the corpse was the sword, while by it lay John Paul Jones's papers and certificates. Another record mentioned that the expenses for the interment, amounting to about $88, had been paid by a commissary of police to save Jones from being buried in the Potter's Field.

To-day the angle of the Rue Grange-aux-Belles and the Rue des Ecluses Saint-Martin marks the locality of the search for Paul Jones's grave.

While recommending to Congress an appropriation of a maximum sum of $35,000, in case one or several houses would have to be sapped, or, at all events, to cover the costs of tunnelling, which in themselves would be considerable, General Porter, who had had great difficulty in securing the city's consent to excavations under the street and the further consent of the proprietors of the houses affected, started work at his own expense.

He had a first shaft sunk in the Rue Grange-aux-Belles, opposite No. 45, and a second one under the shed of a grain dealer, at No. 43 of the same street, only a few yards from the intersection of the Rue des Ecluses Saint-Martin, at the corner of which stands a bar. The primitive idea was to sink these two shafts down to a depth of twenty-five feet or so, in order to make sure that the cemetery was indeed there and that the bones had not been disturbed. Although tradition had it that the cemetery had never been touched, Ambassador Porter did not want to take any risks.

galleries were excavated, connecting the two ht and day the employes of Ambassador Porter bur- the foundations of old houses, looking everywhere -encrusted leaden casket—the first surface indication rch might have become successful.

s ago Ambassador Porter received a hurried summons uperintendent of the work in the old cemetery. A brought the news to his house that a leaden casket und. More than that, the laborers had been able to engraved on its top the word "Anglois."

es was of English birth!

Porter leaped into a carriage and was driven to the and. On his way he picked up M. Andre, expert of the Louvre Museum, who had been interested in the search from the start.

The earth-encrusted and corroded relic had been hoisted out of the shaft and exposed to the light in the shed of the grain dealer, at No. 43 Rue des Ecluses Saint Martin. Minute precautions had been taken lest the aged coffin should crumble to pieces.

Eagerly General Porter and M. Andre bent over it The word "Anglois" was readily deciphered. The Ambassador and the expert looked at each other. M. Andre was first to speak

"We must send for chemicals," he said. "It is a brass plate Evidently two preceding words of the inscription have been obliterated by time"

"Why 'two words'?" inquired General Porter

"Because those two words would complete the inscription, if this is indeed the body of Paul Jones—and, see, there is space for them."

M Andre was evidently much excited He had a passion for cryptograms.

"But there is no record of the inscription," said General Porter.

"Terror of the English."

"You must remember that existing records are incomplete," said the expert. "But we have a significant clue in this word, 'Anglois.' What if we find the whole description reads 'Terreur des Anglais'?"

"'Terror of the English,'" translated General Porter Paul Jones was all that. M. Andre, I congratulate you.'

The Ambassador was now as enthusiastic as the expert. They sent for acids, and for an hour every effort was made to bring to light the missing two words. At length it was evident that the hypothesis of M. Andre was mistaken. More disappointing yet, the acids brought to light a date which in itself disputed the theory that this was the leaden casket containing the remains of Paul Jones. That date was:

"May 22, 1790."

Paul Jones had not died until May 18, 1792—two years after this casket had been placed in the ground.

But to make doubly sure, the coffin was opened. The body was not in good preservation. With it in the coffin were none of the articles known to have been buried with the American admiral. A few days later records were examined which showed that on the date engraved on this casket there had been buried in this old cemetery a French Protestant pastor named "Anglois."

This was all a bitter disappointment. Other similar disappointments followed. Other leaden coffins were exhumed, and other messengers hurried General Porter to the scene on promising clues, which proved to be false. Each time the Ambassador had his brief thrill of hope for nothing.

At last the great day came. On April 14 Ambassador Porter was again hastily summoned. Again he thrilled with hope that his faith and labors and expenditures were about to be rewarded.

A fourth leaden coffin had been found. It was superior in solidity and workmanship to any one of the others. The other three had borne some sort of plate; this bore none.

The top of the casket bore an indentation—made long before—as though a pick had been thrust through it. It was explained to Ambassador Porter that, resting on the casket, when it was discovered, were fragments of a wooden outer coffin and a human skull. Evidently one or more bodies had been buried above it and an attempt made to exhume them many years before. It was possible that that stroke of the pick had torn away the plate on the leaden coffin below.

At the first penetration of the chisel a strong odor of alcohol was apparent. The casket was found to be brimful of the liquid, in which floated a corpse wrapped in a sheet with a packing of straw about it. Owing to the preservative effects of the alcohol the sheet and the straw were still firm in texture. This augured well for the state of the body

General Porter lifted a fold of the sheet, and the face of the great American Admiral was exposed.

Colonel Bailly Blanchard held in his hand a cast of the best known medallion of Paul Jones's head. Every one present was immediately struck with its resemblance to the features in the casket which the alcohol had perfectly preserved.

Here, in the presence of Ambassador Porter and Colonel Bailly Blanchard, measures were taken to forestall any possible future doubt that it was really the body of John Paul Jones which had been found.

The body was then taken from the casket with the utmost care and laid on the marble table. It was as firm and compact as though death had been yesterday. The limbs were found to be wrapped in tinfoil, evidently as an extra protection against injury during a long sea voyage, for it is known that those who buried Paul Jones anticipated that some day his remains would be taken to America. Colonel Blackden, one of the pall bearers, had written in a letter, which still exists

"His body was put in a leaden coffin, so that in case the United States, which he had so essentially served, should claim his remains, they might be more easily removed."

Even Linen Marked "J."

First the body was measured in detail. These measurements and other comparisons were authoritative.

The Admiral's exact height was five feet seven inches—precisely the measurement of the corpse.

The size and shape of the head left no room for doubt. The hair, like that of the Admiral, was dark brown, slightly gray in places, indicating the right age—forty-five years. It was long, combed back and gathered in a clasp at the back of the neck—just as in the medallion. The facial resemblance was striking. The face was clean shaved, as was the Admiral's habit.

The linen, which was well preserved, contained a valuable mark of identification in an embroidered "J," which, when inverted, was an equally good "P."

The body revealed wounds similar to those Paul Jones is known to have received.

There was still one more means of rendering assurance doubly sure. The body was so well preserved that the organs must be in fair condition. The disease which ended the Admiral's life was known. In the case of a recent death an autopsy would certainly reveal it.

So the strange scene was enacted of an autopsy on the body of a man who had been dead more than a hundred years. The result was entirely convincing. The last precaution against error had been taken. Ambassador Porter was now justified in officially reporting to his Government the finding of Paul Jones's remains.

In a handsome casket, in the receiving vault of the American Church in the Avenue de l'Alma, now rest the remains of John Paul Jones pending action by the United States Government on the means of their transportation to America.

THESE two photographs will always be valued mementoes of the most impressive moments of the search for the body of John Paul Jones. In the lower one the long-sought leaden casket has been at last unearthed. The upper one depicts the assured triumph of the undertaking

It shows a handsome new casket draped with the United States flag resting in the American Church at Paris. Within it is the body of John Paul Jones, identified beyond doubt by every test to which experts could put it—height, features, color and manner of wearing the hair, and wounds.

The scene revealed by the lower photograph is a thrilling one. The earth-encrusted casket, shown in the underground gallery where it was found, is the last of four similar ones, each of the other three having furnished only bitter disappointment for the searchers. Resting upon it is a human skull from the rotted wooden coffin entombed above it.

How They are "Making Over" the Chorus Girl who is Going to Marry a Lord

KERR

And the Interesting Way in Which Frances Belmont Is Being Trained to Become a Member of British Nobility

"Well, suppose I'm not."

PHOTOS BY E. CHICKERING & CO. BOSTON

"Miss Belmont is learning."

PREPARATORY to her marriage to Lord Ashburton, Frances Belmont is being educated.

Oh, not in the three R's. Bless you, no—but there are other things besides reading, writing and arithmetic that a wife of a peer of the realm must know.

Frances Belmont's engagement to Lord Ashburton, the distinguished head of the Baring family, is announced, and his future bride is in Paris studying [illegible] scenes that must take place when she is finally called upon to assume her part in the great world of real society.

Her education for some years has been confined to the mimic world, where she made various "hits," dancing, singing, skipping, and even scrubbing. She was one of the "Florodora" sextette and she was one of the Maggie Doolans who scrubbed the floor in "Miladi."

She danced as lightly as the proverbial feather, and she scrubbed with far more grace than muscle. Where every one was supposed to be the same, she was noticed as being different. A chorus girl can do no more. It made the fame of Frances Belmont. In a single night, even, she became known as "Frankie."

But "hits" of that kind are not in demand in the society where she will make her appearance as the Baroness Ashburton. Miss Belmont is clever enough to realize this, and she has gone to school in Paris, where they understand all about the ways and the manners, the graces and the talents of aristocrats.

First of all she has to learn to forget that ever in her whole life did she see, except from the stalls, you know, such a sextette as the Florodora one, where the girls winked a little, ogled a little, kicked a little.

"Shocking, my dear, shocking!" A calm-faced sister gently assures her that she will have no use for such accomplishments in the future, and she presents her instead with a new list quite as formidable and—well Frankie Belmont is an actress, and it remains to be seen if they are not equally in her line.

Making a Baroness.

In the convent situated in the midst of trees just outside of Paris, which is famous for its training of the daughters of the haute noblesse, Frances Belmont is a determined and ardent pupil.

The sisters know that she is to become the bride of Lord Ashburton, and that she is to be fitted to meet Milady So and So, and Her Grace the Duchess of any estate, and Her Majesty the Queen.

"Ah, no, no!" they cried to her at her first lesson, when they had requested her to greet a lady of her own prospective rank. "You do not seem at all glad to see her."

Miss Belmont tossed her head in true American fashion, and said, "Well, suppose I'm not?"

"Oh, you want me to act," cried the little American. "All right, then."

"No, not a bit like it. You see, it should be natural—just a step forward, gently—so, so, and that is all."

"Why, it wouldn't carry as far as the front row." For a moment Miss Frances Belmont had forgotten that she wasn't Frankie back again behind the footlights trying to make the most of nothing.

In the convent everything is reversed. She is taught to make nothing of her entrances, for instance.

"You make your effects, my dear," they tell her, "with what you have to say, with the sweetness of your voice. Its low pitch"—

"But they'll never hear me at the other end of the room," she protested.

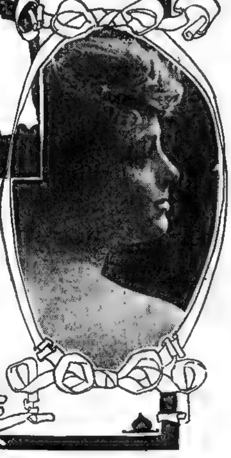
"Of course not. A lady's voice is never raised. Those who want to hear come to her—so she tests her power."

"Oh, I see," she cried. "That makes it easy. You don't care a rap for the galleries."

It is very hard to eradicate stage methods, particularly when one has used them for some time as effectively as Frankie Belmont. She was famous for standing out among a crowd.

"You see," she explained to one of her confidantes, "it means forgetting all I have learned. I seem to hear in my ears the old cry, 'Pay up, my girl, you're letting the whole act down. Buck up. You know how afraid they always are on the stage that you're not earning your paltry salary.'"

But Miss Belmont is learning gradually to fit herself for the new world she is to captivate. Perhaps you don't remember that she was once famous for what they called the beautiful curves of her figure. Now, of course, having been so endowed by nature, she did all she could to accentuate them. She had one of the very first of the real kangaroo figures.



"The Florodora girl."

"In the quiet little convent."

"Known on Broadway as Frankie."

When she brought it to the quiet little convent just out of Paris the air about her echoed with the words "horreur!" which in good English means "horror."

"Please sit down, my dear young lady," requested one of the ample-robed nuns.

Miss Belmont drew her tight silk gown still tighter about her, pulled her chair toward her deftly with a disengaged foot, and then sat down sideways.

The sister put one delicate hand before her eyes. "I had no idea," she exclaimed, "that one could sit in so tight a costume. I believed in my innocence that it was only made to walk in."

"There are very few of them who look as well—who—er—well, you know —— What? You don't like it?"

At first Miss Belmont really thought the poor, dear little nun was jealous. Then she explained in detail how great ladies were taught to float into their chairs and gather their dresses around them so that one really didn't know how they did it. And as for dragging one's chair forward with one's foot—again the words echoed with the words "horreur."

And at last Miss Belmont, having learned to enter a room with dignity, slowly yet quietly, with head erect yet not boldly, with empressement yet without attracting too much attention, and having relinquished her kangaroo figure and having acquired the art of floating into a chair, was now considered ready for a court presentation.

It was a mimic one, of course, and took place in the great old hall where many a future marchioness and duchess had been drilled before her. The throne was a high backed, much worn velvet chair brought from the dear Mother Superior's own room and placed on a raised platform. One of the sisters occupied it. Some of the other sisters and some of the graduating class stood about, representing the lords and ladies of the court.

The name of Miss Belmont was called, and she entered, beaming. One may understand that this former chorus girl, big as her hits had been, must have felt that the greatest moment of her life was in rehearsal, to become a reality surely at no distant date. She beamed and smiled. The haughty stare of a great dame of the aristocracy was lacking. The sister on the throne coughed, and Miss Belmont pursed her lips together and tried to think of prunes and prisms, and anything in the world but the lively music of "Miladi" and the rapid winks of "Florodora."

Behind her trailed a satin gown brought out for the occasion. She dropped a curtsey, low and sweeping, keeping her balance admirably. The sisters nodded at her with sweet admiration. Ah, there her stage training stood her in good stead!

Then came the recovery, and somehow Miss Belmont's train became entangled somehow, somewhere. She remembered she was to back out of the august presence. She must untie herself. She did—with one splendid, dexterous, muscular, graceful high kick!

The lady's train flew as the lady's foot directed it. And once again through the old building out into the older woods echoed the word "horreur!"

Ready for Presentation.

But Miss Belmont is learning. If you were to see her now you wouldn't imagine that she had ever been familiarly known up and down Broadway as "Frankie." Baron Ashburton is delighted with her progress, and the great event which is to make her his bride is scheduled, they say, for one of the early summer months. And then she will play the new part for which she is rehearsing.

The Ashburtons have been captivated by Americans before now. The present Baron's grandfather, when Minister to the United States in the early forties, married a daughter of Senator Bingham, of Pennsylvania. As far as one may know, however, she went over to London ready equipped to appear in court circles and hold her own there with the best.

Miss Belmont's equipment is more gradual, but there is no doubt that it will be thorough. When she becomes Baroness Ashburton she will be the mistress of estates covering some 60,000 acres of the finest land in Great Britain.

"Few who look"——

It is worth while going to school all over again and learning to mind one's p's and q's to play such a role—isn't it?

Four years ago Frances Belmont was unknown. Since then she has come forward, step by step, down to the very footlights, and now in a few weeks she is to step over them into the arms of one of the richest and proudest of English lords.

Who would have imagined that Frankie Belmont, chorus girl, would ever be cast to play one of the most important ladies at the court of King Edward VII.?

Not even Frankie herself or you may be sure she would have been prepared. However, her education is nearly finished, and when you next hear of her she will be every inch the lady bred—Milady Ashburton—to her finger tips.

"Milady Ashburton to her finger tips."

Fashionable Skirts, Pleats, Trimmings and Ruffles.

MRS. OSBORN

CREATOR OF FASHIONS FOR THE FASHIONABLE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

MRS. OSBORN

The Circular Skirt Is Far and Away the Smartest Style of This Season. For Walking Skirts the Pleated Style Is Best.

Lots of Trimming On Evening Skirts and Ruffles of Lace With Puffing Are Very Popular.

I MAY confidently assert that the smart skirt of the season is the circular, made full and gathered at the top and sloping sharply and gracefully from a fitted upper portion to a flaring bottom.

These noted not necessarily have a seam in front, although most of them have, and it is imperative that this seam be on the bias.

While this model of skirt is the newest and smartest, the pleated skirt remains a favorite for walking purposes.

The French try to insist upon the circular skirt for walking purposes, but it has been found that this skirt does not hang or set well, when cut short, because the bottom never remains an even length and requires constant changing.

The pleated skirt, on the contrary, always remains an even length and hangs and sets beautifully when cut in short lengths. This style of skirt has come to stay. People may change the style a bit at the top, and the width of the pleats, but they will not alter the cut and hang of this popular and becoming skirt.

Short Walking Skirt Discarded.

Although the French introduced the short skirt for walking purposes, and although it is eminently practical and sensible, women in Paris now rarely appear in it. They prefer the graceful draperies of the long skirt, and, since Paris is the cleanest big city in the world, they may wear long draperies on the street with more impunity than we can.

American women are too alive to the many virtues of the short skirt to give it up, but they have lengthened them to an extent that makes them no longer desirable on rainy days. The new short skirt just clears the ground instead of displaying a graceful—or ungraceful—ankle, as formerly. The latter make is now only used for tennis and outdoor country costumes, and is rapidly disappearing from city streets.

The reason of this change is due to the style of coats now being worn and to the tiny hats. These appear awkward in connection with an ankle-length skirt.

The circular skirt is intended to be made up in plain materials that have some weight to them. This slight weight is necessary in order to achieve the best results in the full, sweeping folds of the skirt.

Short skirts are being made up in linen and Summer fabrics as well as in some silks. There will not be as much silk worn this season as we thought there would be, as people are showing more desire for wash fabrics and flimy stuffs.

In smart silks there are thin liberty taffetas; punjabs, which are softer and thinner than foulards, and pongees. These are all soft and thin—necessities in the smart dress materials of this season.

Taffeta is the only stiff material which has a vogue, and this silk is decidedly smart. In Paris a great many new models are being made up in taffeta, particularly in figured goods. Lovely pompadour effects are to be seen in this sort of silk and also in chiffons and a number of thin, smart materials seldom seen in shops on this side of the water.

Pompadour Materials Are Smart.

Pompadour materials are very smart and becoming and seem to fit in poetically with the Springtime.

In batistes, chiffons and similar soft, thin materials, skirts for evening wear are elaborately trimmed. One can almost cover these with trimming if it is put on scientifically.

A favorite way of trimming these is with three lace ruffles at the bottom, headed by small puffings made of the material. Preferably these lace ruffles are small, and do not take away from the length of the gown, but they are also used in all widths.

Skirts of this kind are also shirred for a distance of two or three inches below the waist, and then the contrast of a plain, smooth portion of material is introduced, further elaborated with a band of velvet. Alternate bands of shirring and velvet continue down on the skirt to suit the taste and outlines of its wearer. Lots of lace, puffings and shirrings are used in decorative work upon evening skirts.

Generally speaking, the line in skirts is kept unbroken a good bit—more especially in skirts for other than evening wear—while two rules are observable in trimming all horizontal effects, used upon long, and perpendicular or slanting effects upon short, skirts.

Parisians trim the front seam in circular skirts, but this fad has not taken hold in New York, and American women rarely accentuate this seam, which is oftentimes invisible.

Silks, Wools and Linens for the Skirt.

Good materials for making up walking skirts are pongees, tweeds, wool novelties in light, thin goods, linens and lightweight serge. This last material has come into vogue a good deal this year for such skirts.

The novelty wools come in all manner of pretty checked gingham and other effects and look very attractive. They are thin and cool and yet of a weave which keeps its shade admirably.

Linens will come in force this season, and will have a big run for outdoor costumes. Colored ones will be used more than ever before, and these are being made in most beautiful colors for the street.

Women in their Spring toggery will make the streets they frequent look like brilliant parterres of color, so pronounced will bright, clear tints become in the immediate future.

Hitherto women have donned quiet colors for street wear, but all this has been changed and the American flag will look pale beside the gay hues of some of the skirts that smart women will wear on the street.

The belt is an important consideration in new gowns, especially in skirts, which presuppose a shirt waist and jacket of some sort. The new belt is two and a half inches in width and most positively does not exhibit a tendency to run up the middle of the back in a point, nor fall over the front in a scallop. The new belt has round, simple lines and is fastened in the back.

Women who have buckled themselves into belts with real fastenings in front and imitation ones in the back will not have that sort of turned-around feeling which will come over the woman who fastens her belt buckle in the back for the first time.

This new method of fastening belts will exercise the muscles of the arms, the temper and—incidentally—the seams of the new tight bodices. But then this style has been introduced for women who have maids to do their fastenings for them.

Most belts of this sort will be of stitched silk to match the skirt, but many of them will be of the material of the dress.

Round, square and oval buckles will be employed upon belts this season and these run to frame rather than solid designs.

An exception to the outline of the new belt appears in the princess skirt—one is shown on this page—and these wide belt effects are built with points or curves to accentuate the princess outline above the gathers. In these the gathers are on the hips and a piece runs down the front.

The princess skirt is becoming alike, to the fat and to the thin woman. Fullness on the hips is much more becoming to a fat woman than tightness—which only makes her look fatter and impresses the ungraceful lines of her figure upon the observer.

Long skirts are much trimmed with puffings, shirrings, side pleatings, or anything that gives the impression of hand work, while short skirts are either plain or little trimmed and have trimming lines that run up and down and not around the skirt. Slanting lines of trimming are also used.

The smartest new trimming is a stitched fold or a piping, and a cord is run through the edge more often than otherwise. There are no hip yokes in the new smart skirts, but there are skirts which do not wholly follow the newest lines and yet which will be worn. Of these is a skirt cut fairly after the circular model and with a ruffle on the bottom. This is a practical skirt for wash fabrics of the less expensive sort which must be tubbed often.

Another skirt is made with panel effects and still another is gored, with panel effects introduced into the seams.

Callot has a skirt made with a panel set in the seam of each side gore. This panel has its outer edge scalloped in long, shallow scallops and these are bound with velvet. The panels turn back in ruffles around the back of the skirt, each ruffle overlapping the next.

The Graceful Princess Skirt.

Figure A shows a very graceful princess skirt of deep cream color, which may be made of any suitable Spring material, especially of wool. It has a wide flounce with very scant gathers, and this is finished with a turned-under edge at the top, more than an inch deep. Below this head runs a stitched line of the dress material with a shirred cord on each side of it.

The skirt is cut with a bias seam down the middle of the front, and it also has a seam down each side. At these side seams a flounce begins above the bottom flounce. The top of this is finished with a number of rows of shirring, headed by a shirred cord, and, above that, more rows of shirring. Above the knees a wide fold runs around the skirt from one side seam to the other, curving at the corners. This has a narrow, upward turning tuck above a deep heading.

The top of the skirt is made in a princess shape, with the top of the front gore turning to each side in curved tabs above a narrow yoke, which has the effect of a wide, fitted ceinture more than of a yoke, as it comes quite as much above as below the waist line. This ceinture curves down each side of the front in rounded tabs.

The full skirt is shirred at the top to this ceinture, leaving the front quite plain and fitted from the top of the ceinture to the hem. This makes a very graceful line and gives a slender appearance to a very full skirt.

A very attractive skirt is shown in figure B. It is of flesh pink veiling, shirred below the belt for a distance of less than an inch below it, and cut with a seam down the middle of the front. It is trimmed around the lower portion with three bands of stitching, the upper band having five rows of stitching, the second seven, and the bottom one nine. This stitching is done over a stiff piece of material set under the skirt.

This style of skirt may be worn with either a bodice or a coat, but in either case the effect of stitched trimming bands must be repeated.

A Skirt of Flesh-Pink Veiling

A narrow stitched tuck heads a fold of panne velvet around the bottom, which is over an inch in width. This skirt may be trimmed differently and may be worn long or short. It may be accompanied by either a bodice or a coat.

Quite a new, smart way of making up a thin black gown is shown in figure D. This is gathered three times below the belt so that the skirt hangs in soft, full folds. A band of velvet three inches in width is set around the skirt at the knees to the sides. Some distance below that is set a fold seven or eight inches in width. Just a little below this is another fold, over an inch wide, above a four-inch hem.

Plain side gores are put in the skirt, no wider than the point of a knife at the top, and trimmed with a velvet band, an inch in width, down the back edge. Down the front edges battlements of the material are fastened down upon a velvet band of the same width.

Around the back runs a velvet band of great width at the bottom, with an interval of five inches between its upper edge and another band of more than three inches in width.

This style of skirt would be charming worn with a bodice built along surplice lines, and it may be built of colored or white as well as black materials.

I would like to add that none of the new American gowns have trains, as many French gowns have.

How You Can Keep Your Baby Happy and Healthy in Hot Weather.

THE hot weather season is the most trying for all babies. General rules to promote the health of these little ones are all the more necessary for observation when the burden of heat is to be borne, with the increased liability to digestive disorders. Proper bathing is a most important matter. In the current number of Good Housekeeping A. F. Reed, M. D., gives some valuable hints on this point.

The infant should be bathed every morning unless there is some contra-indication. If the bath results in blue fingernails or skin, or seems to weaken or lower the child's vitality, as evinced by cold extremities or nose, or quickened breathing, we may consider these contra-indications to a full bath, and should only sponge off sufficiently for cleanliness. Bathing should be done as quickly as is consistent with thoroughness, and done in the sunlight if possible, care being taken to protect the infant's eyes from a strong light. The water should be neither very hot nor very cold.

The proper way to adjust the temperature to the age is by means of a thermometer suited to the purpose, and test according to age as follows: At birth the temperature of the bath should be ninety-eight degrees; during the first three or four weeks, ninety-five degrees, one to six months, ninety-three and two-tenths degrees; six to twelve months, ninety degrees; twelve to twenty-four months, eighty-six degrees, and in the third or fourth year, seventy-five degrees. Judgment must be used in all cases, and an attempt be made to meet individual needs. As the child matures, he may be gradually accustomed to a little cool sponging after his bath. This is invigorating and of help in guarding against colds.

In the hottest of weather the temperature may be reduced to eighty degrees in quite young infants, other things being equal. The face should be washed first, while the body is kept wrapped in a warm blanket. The nose, eyes and ears should be gently cleaned, the nose being especially important, as any obstruction of the child's respiration easily reduces the child's vitality. The scalp should be soaped, washed off and well dried. In washing the body, especial care should be given to the folds of the skin, the places most prone to chafe.

The temperature should be tested occasionally and both hot and cold water should be within easy reach to temper the bath as needed. A good way is to keep the bath thermometer constantly in the water and note its changes.

The soap used should be free from irritating substances. Two sponges should be used, one for the head and face, the other for the rest of the bath.

Getting Ready to Be Married---The First in a New Series by Mrs. Linda Hull Larned, Author of "The Hostess of To-day."

NO. 1.—PREPARING THE LINEN CHEST.

"The kitchen and pantry laundry must be kept in their own departments in order to be handy."

"Many housekeepers prefer two sets of pillows—those for daytime in daintily embroidered or lace trimmed slips."

WE are gradually but surely grasping and assimilating many of the excellent ideas of the German hausfrau and mother and especially those practical ones concerning the girl chicks in her brood. She, the German mother, believes that her daughter must be well supplied with household linen even if it be her fate to remain always a fraulein.

So it is becoming the fad among American mothers of the most praiseworthy type not only to educate their daughters in all kinds of household lore, but to employ their leisure moments in embroidering towels, hemstitching sheets and pillow cases, and preparing all the other necessities which go to supply that piece of furniture, which by courtesy towards a bygone time when linen was the only commodity of the day, is called the linen chest.

The bride-to-be can herself take an active part, not being in the least ashamed to be seen "getting ready," even if there is apparently nothing tangible to be getting ready for.

Bachelor Girl's Linen.

The girl of to-day, like the girl of every day or time, when she reaches womanhood, is expected to get married, but mothers and fathers of to-day no longer bank on these expectations. They believe that next to being happily married is to be happily employed, and a certain amount of household independence must be granted to the girl who is earnestly endeavoring to carve a career of single blessedness for herself. Even the girl who does neither, but remains at home and in an unpretentious manner assumes the cares and responsibilities of the household menage is entitled to her own household belongings, that they may be as dainty and up-to-date as those of her more or less fortunate sisters who have gone into the married state. Therefore a well supplied linen chest does not always carry the inference that there is a prospective husband.

But our girl who gets engaged and finds that no preparation has been made for this emergency must immediately begin with the beginnings of "getting ready." Her mother and women kinfolks, and even all of her girl friends, will fly to the rescue, and there will probably be all sorts of "showers" given in her honor.

At the "showers," which are social functions of an informal nature, she will be the recipient of all kinds of fittings, not only for the chest, but for the new household—including dainty accessories for the trousseau.

The shower functions are never given by the bride-to-be. They are always delightful surprises, given in her honor by intimate and interested friends.

Invitations to these functions include the suggestion that each one who accepts should bring a towel, more or less embroidered, or a doily, or a handkerchief embroidered with the girl's initials. There have been even china showers, lingerie showers, and, the best and most amusing of all, recipe and kitchen showers; so she who "gets engaged" has a pretty good time all through the engagement period, all at the expense of her friends.

Washable Fixings and Furnishings.

Therefore, by hook or by crook, by her own efforts or those of relatives and friends, she must have a full supply of dainty, washable furnishings and fixings for dining room, living room, bedrooms, bathroom and kitchen. She must have enough to supply the ordinary demands of the household, including the guests and servants, and also be prepared for emergencies like sickness and society, and the supply should be large enough to carry her through that most happy and yet most trying period, the first five years of married life. It is such a help to the small income of those who are beginning at the foot of the business ladder, for most matrimonial beginners have their way to make.

Taking into consideration that "the way" of the majority is rather moderate, our suggestions will be based upon the hypothesis of moderate incomes.

The number of articles may be duplicated many times by those who can afford the expenditure, but the amount given is really enough to see a couple through quite decently.

There should be all ready one dozen embroidered or hemstitched towels, all marked with the bride's initials or monogram. These may be of damask or fine huckaback; two dozen large towels of rather fine huckaback, plain, but with the bride's name in one corner in indelible ink; two dozen small hand towels of the same quality; one dozen cheaper ones of the large size for each maid to be employed, one dozen bath towels. Two dozen wash cloths—let grandmother knit these in odd moments—and three bath mats that will wash.

Her Table and Bed Linen.

For each bed there should be four pairs of sheets, and for the guest room bed an extra pair of linen sheets, embroidered or hemstitched at the top hem. If linen be used for all the beds then the tops of one of each pair should be hemstitched. Three pairs of cotton sheets for each maid's bed. Four pairs of cotton pillow cases and two of linen for each bed unless all be of linen. The linen pillow cases are usually embroidered. Many housekeepers prefer rather than the uncomfortable bolster or the "sham" of a pillow sham to use two sets of pillows—one for day time in daintily embroidered or lace trimmed slips with sheet top to match—hand made lace if lace be used, not machine made—and the other set in plain slips to be put on the closet shelf during the day—upon which the best ones are put at night. The maid's bed should have four pairs of cotton slips in readiness. There should be one rose blanket for each bed. These should be cut in two—the outside bound with ribbon, and the up side of each be covered with a cotton or linen casing extending a foot from the top. These casings are something like a tea cozy, covering both sides of the sheet and may be buttoned on to the blanket and are easily removed to be laundered, thus keeping the blankets a long time from tub and destruction. Each bed should be supplied with two counterpanes and a good way to keep both counterpane and blanket clean is to use an extra light cotton sheet between them. The counterpane may then be folded back over the foot of the bed inside out, at night, and the sheet covering, which is light, will protect the blanket.

There should be provided for each bed two mattress protectors so there may be always a clean one, and one down comfortable covered with silk or silkoline to be folded across the foot of the bed.

Now for the dining room—and this is what really goes into the chest. There should be at least six table cloths for ordinary use and four larger and better ones for company. Four dozen napkins of ordinary size and two dozen handsome ones for special occasions. They may all be embroidered, but the best ones should most assuredly, and in lieu of the embroidered initials on the ordinary ones—the name in indelible ink in one corner. Two dozen tea napkins of fine quality, embroidered, will be found useful for afternoon tea, or the light supper after theatre or card party, also two entire sets of plate and finger bowl doilies. If the table is to be used bare for breakfasts and luncheons, as well as afternoon tea, she will require a large assortment of doilies and centre pieces. There should be at least six tray cloths, twelve carver's napkins and three tea cloths to spread on the afternoon tea table. These tea cloths, tray cloths and doilies should be marvels of hand work in embroidery or lace. It is the present fad to shun Renaissance and Teneriffe lace as being too common for the up-to-date bride. The rage at present is for hand embroidery, or a combination of hand work and cluny, or filet lace, or Italian cut work. Real and even imitation Irish lace is also fashionable.

Chest Should Have Sliding Drawer.

Every household should be supplied with, at least, two linen embroidered tea cozies covering one of cotton wadding. The housewife who can have in her linen chest some beautiful pieces of Japanese or Chinese embroidery is fortunate, but she should see that no silk is used in her embroidery and everything should be white. Colored embroidery, except for special sets, is no longer a la mode.

The chest which is to hold all these things should be of handsome carved wood with a sliding tray. This tray is half the size of the width of the chest, so that it can be pushed back or front in order to reach the linen underneath and need never to be taken out.

The kitchen and pantry cloths will not be put in the chest. They will be in drawers in their own departments in order to be handy. They will consist of one dozen fine linen towels for glass and china. These come marked "glass" in the woven border. Two dozen heavier ones for heavy china, and one dozen still coarser for kitchen ware. One dozen roller towels for kitchen, and one dozen each of two kinds of cloths to be half a yard square for dish washing and sink and table cleaning, to be kept separate, of course. Two loofahs (to be bought at the chemist's) for dish cloths will be found useful, and two or three dish mops. This is all our bride may be concerned about at present, as other fixings and furnishings, like bureau covers and the like, must be prepared to fit the furniture, and so may be left until she is actually living in the new home—or at least until after the entire trousseau is completed.

Pearl Flowers on Tortoise Shell.

THE big jewelry shops in Regent street, London, and in the Rue de la Paix, Paris, are paying a delicate compliment to Japanese art in their displays of new jewelled ornaments for the hair and costume of womankind. This is apparent in their popular use of foliage and animal life in novel designs. Simple fidelity to nature in the flower, insect or animal chosen as a model for buckles and combs is where the Japanese spirit enters.

French workmen, however, improve upon the haphazard, often inaccurate and ill-proportioned, methods of their far Eastern brothers, producing floral designs, especially, with exactness and good taste. Tortoise shell, especially in the light yellow, more expensive style, is used as being the most suitable material to work upon.

The material is given roughly cut to the designer, who then builds up his plan from the size and number of diamonds, turquoises, opals and pearls at his disposal. The diamond is invariably backed directly with silver, as gold or other metal would lessen its sparkling white effect.

The London prices for combs of these new designs range from $1,000 down to $25, according to the value of the jewels jewels used.

A great amount of attention is given to the practical side of these ornaments for the hair and the costume. Stylish hairpins, however fantastic they may be, are ingeniously contrived to serve the purpose of pinning the hair, the tiara is light and comfortable and the diadem will not bruise the most delicate forehead.

There is a particularly charming gold buckle, heart shaped, set with a costly opal held in the fangs of two snakes' heads, which meet with jaws widely distended. The apex of the heart is where the bodies of the snakes join. The large size of opal needed to make this design effective makes it an expensive one.

A simple, yet elegant comb for the back of the hair has a high crest with forget-me-nots in enamel. A two-pronged tortoise shell hair dagger is more elaborate, having forget-me-nots in pearl. Larger combs in tortoise shell have crests overlaid with flowers formed wholly of small pearls.

A beautiful pendant is formed of twigs and leaves of gold, with a bunch of pearls like a sprig of white mulberries in the centre, while a large pearl, or a diamond, trembles on its fastening at the tip.

The imitations of insects are more complicated. Two dragon flies, with bodies and heads of tortoise shell, and wings of white fish pearl, with silver lining, make an original comb, of which the flies' long, spindle legs form the clasps.

These are simply a few of the very many similarly conceived designs. In all of them strength combined with grace is secured by amalgamating many leaves of metal by pressure into the thickness of the actual leaf or flower, upon which the workman can then operate, producing the necessary dents and projections on the surface.

In the best English social circles there is a prejudice against the display of bizarre styles, which one would have thought would doom many of these exquisite ornaments to remain in the shop windows. It is noticed, however, that they are much in evidence in the West End, outside of the ultra aristocratic old Bond street quarter.

This is enough to have caused the more popular dealers in ornaments to imitate the real Regent street article at a tenth part of its cost. Hat pins are a specialty, there being exquisite specimens in the form of holly leaves, snakes, mice, etc.

HERE ARE SOME GOOD REMEDIES TO CURE YOU OF THE BLUES

WHEN you have "the blues" don't rush to a drug store, laying all the blame on your liver. Even the liver when on strike, yields to other influences than drugs. There are several fine and rational remedies for the blues, whatever may be their cause, and they are all good for the liver, too. Benjamin Keech, writing in Medical Talk, tells about them and from personal experience guarantees their efficacy. If the advice is followed carefully good results will be noticed.

The first step is to get the mind in proper condition and keep it that way. But there will probably be setbacks. In this event, forgive yourself and begin again. The first effort, though puny, helped you, and all the other efforts, taken altogether, will effect a cure.

Perhaps your environment is against you—maybe this is the very thing that makes you blue. If so, you can, in time, change your environment by persistently desiring all things that are good. You cannot become an optimist in a day, but you can certainly begin to cultivate optimism and cheerfulness at this very moment. When a bad thought enters your mind, dismiss it and replace it with a good one. Then firmly hold to the latter.

One cure for the blues is to quit being selfish. It is true that some of the most unselfish people imaginable are seemingly overtaken by the blues at regular intervals, but this is probably because their good plans are for the moment upset, and not because they are really selfish. At the same time, most of us can lay our blueness to the fact that we can not have our own way. The remedy is to "do something for somebody, quick."

When all of your hopes are crushed, and terrible, indigo days follow one another for weeks at a time, just forget that there is such a person as yourself, and "find something good to do" for some one near you. This is a beautiful cure. You can not appreciate its merits until you have tried it. Plenty of work will do the blue individual untold good.

Another leading remedy for people who are either slightly or seriously afflicted is to take a walk. When everything goes wrong, put on your hat and ramble for a day through fields and woodlands. If you are a true lover of Nature you cannot fail to be benefited by this treatment.

If ROBINSON CRUSOE Had Been Cast Away in Modern Times

"Poor old Robinson Crusoe!"

Enormous Progress in Every Science and All the Comforts of Modern Life, Indicated in Difference Between Crusoe's Vessel and the Modern Steamship With Its Elaborate Mechanical Equipment and Stores of All Kinds of Preserved Foods--Everything from Golf Balls to Pianos Are Now Being Carried on a Modern Liner.

HAVE you ever tried to imagine what would happen to a modern Robinson Crusoe who should be wrecked on a modern ocean liner?

The men who plan the ocean liners have been giving their attention to this question, and they have come to the conclusion that the modern Robinson Crusoe would find himself in a really delightful situation. Not only does the liner provide every luxury and comfort for ordinary travellers, but there are special provisions for them in case they should become Crusoes.

The history of Robinson Crusoe, a story largely founded on fact, which has thrilled and fascinated the youth of the whole world for nearly two hundred years—since 1719—might be repeated again to-day, but with the improvements due to the enormous progress in science and knowledge since its publication.

Let us suppose that the liner in mid Pacific breaks her shaft, which smashes a hole in her bottom. The crew and passengers all take to the boats except Crusoe, who is bidden up forward. The sinking ship, held up by the water-tight compartments, drives on to a desert island, and in the morning, the storm abated, she rests comfortably on the shore.

Everything Handy for Crusoe II.

Crusoe II. looks around and finds that one boat, and one of the patent non-capsizable rafts, capable of carrying sixty passengers with provisions for a week, have been left behind. The raft is all ready to be pushed overboard with the least possible trouble or loss of time, and this, of course, Crusoe promptly proceeds to do.

It will be remembered that the original Robinson Crusoe with infinite labor constructed a wretched raft of old pieces of wood and rope, which threatened to capsize even if he shifted one foot.

Our modern Crusoe would find up in the bow a handy little derrick, which he could operate with a new patent windlass. With this he would start in to stock his rafts to begin with. Poor old Robinson had to lower everything with a piece of rope.

On the modern liner there is a large number of deck tackles with which one man can haul up or let down a weight of a ton. They can be carried around and attached to anything strong enough to hold them.

For the exploratory voyage to the island the modern Crusoe takes a little collapsible tent, a rifle, a revolver, a hundred pounds of corned beef, with beans, water and biscuit. He lands on the island, finds a charming place, far more so than that of Juan Fernandez, and selects a splendid view on which to build his house and make himself comfortable.

Then he returns to the ship to gather the material for his country house.

Easy to Build a Handsome House.

He would find a whole shopful of carpenters' and engineers' tools to aid him in building, and also at every turn of the ship a saw and axe placed handily in a glass case for his convenience. Poor Robinson of old had to get along with two rusty saws, an axe and a hammer. He lacked those essential tools—a plane, an augur, screws and screwdriver, pick and shovel.

Our modern Crusoe determines to build himself a handsome little one-storied bungalow, just the sort of place for this climate. It can be built to cover as much ground as desired, and there is no trouble of running up and downstairs.

Crusoe II. saws out the handsome, polished hard wood walls of the staterooms for the walls of his bungalow. For flooring he cuts out pieces of the beautiful promenade deck, which is easily removed, being laid over iron without nails or screws.

The ventilators make beautiful chimneys and the skylights of the saloon and glass doors of the chart room make fine windows.

Poor old Robinson had to live in a hole which he scooped in the rock.

Now Crusoe II. will begin to provide himself with luxuries. What is home without a piano? On the liner there is at least one grand and one upright. He chooses the latter, because it is handier and quite noisy enough for a bungalow.

He can also take the instruments of the brass band and the string band that used to divert the other passengers. The old Crusoe had absolutely no musical instruments.

The liner will yield many of the most valuable and recent scientific instruments. There is a large supply of phonographs with cylinders recording all the popular songs and perhaps the latest speeches of Chauncey Depew and William J. Bryan.

Crusoe II. will also talk into the phonograph and later be able to listen to his own wit, eloquence and musical ability.

One of the cruellest trials of the original Crusoe was the absence of any living person to talk to, and on this account he nearly lost the power of speech. Crusoe II. will run no such danger surrounded by phonographs on every hand.

A swift but comfortable touring automobile will be one of the earliest luxuries that he will fetch up from the ship's hold. When the savages from a distant island make a descent upon his island as they did in old Robinson Crusoe's day, he will not have to retreat to his stockade to fight them. He will go out in his automobile with a dozen revolvers and magazine rifles. When they pursue him he will keep out of their reach, shooting them down all the time. When they run he will pursue them and annihilate them.

There are plenty of strong and handsome oil lamps on the liner, but not content with this, our passenger, who has studied electricity, like all intelligent men, will take ashore a small electric light plant.

He will be able to disembark one of the liner's dynamos and harness it by a water wheel to a stream.

Trunks Full of Fine Clothes.

Crusoe II. will have the pick of hundreds of trunks full of the finest clothes—not to speak of the very useful and durable ones worn by the officers and sailors.

He will no doubt start by sending ashore a few handy dress suit cases and men's steamer trunks.

He will pick out one of those tall English hatboxes that contain a tall hat, a derby hat, a travelling cap and a quantity of cuffs and collars, tooth brushes and so forth. These hatboxes are a product of English genius designed to enable a man to present a genteel appearance even if dropped in the Desert of Sahara.

Crusoe I., we shall all remember, had to dress himself in goat skins.

There will also be on board several hundred trunks belonging to rich women, containing the latest creations of the Parisian dressmakers, together with much jewelry, diamond tiaras, pearl necklaces and so forth. But alas! how useless with no one to wear them. As he gazes upon these Crusoe II. will sigh more deeply than Crusoe I. when he looked at the useless gold on his old ship.

Crusoe II., we fear, will probably visit the compartment of the liner where the strong waters are stored. He will haul up cases of champagne, Burgundy, Bordeaux (vintage wines only), cognac, Scotch whiskey, Kentucky Bourbon, Chartreuse, Benedictine—not to mention any more.

Poor old Crusoe I. had to content himself with a barrel or two of inferior rum, of which he took only half a mouthful at a time, when he felt very ill, for fear of using it up.

In the liner's kitchen or galley, Crusoe II. will find a patent range of the most compact and useful form yet [illegible] essary pots and pans.

Crusoe I. [illegible] of goat skins to protect himself from the sun. His [illegible] successor will find all the silk umbrellas he needs on the [illegible]

How poor old Crusoe I. sighed for the [illegible] of even a pot to boil his goat's meat in!

The liner has at least 5,000 tons of coal on board, which will last the castaway [illegible] for the rest of his life.

The big ship, of course, [illegible] quite a colony of cats and dogs, some belonging to the passengers and others to the officers and crew. They will supply the castaway with companionship and amusement for years.

Even more useful than these are the eight fine horses belonging to a rich passenger [illegible] up forward. Crusoe II. gets these poor creatures overboard with some difficulty, but once ashore they become his most devoted servants—they are so glad to be ashore. Of course, he does not forget to haul up from the hold carriages and harness of various kinds to use with them.

There is such a variety of food on board, both fresh and preserved, that Crusoe II. [illegible] as at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, [illegible] ne cooks or not.

If feeling very gay [illegible] fresh canned 'oyster," pate de foie gras and [illegible] he can sup plainly [illegible] with peas and potatoes, and English [illegible] canned beef and beans, [illegible] with black coffee.

There are over 5,000 pounds of ice on the liner and numerous [illegible] portable refrigerators provided for this and other emergencies. [illegible] II. [illegible] all of the [illegible] ashore.

[illegible] on the refrigerators. He will seek out the deepest and coolest cave on the island, and into the bottom of this he will gradually carry all his ice. Here he will have a splendid cool storage vault.

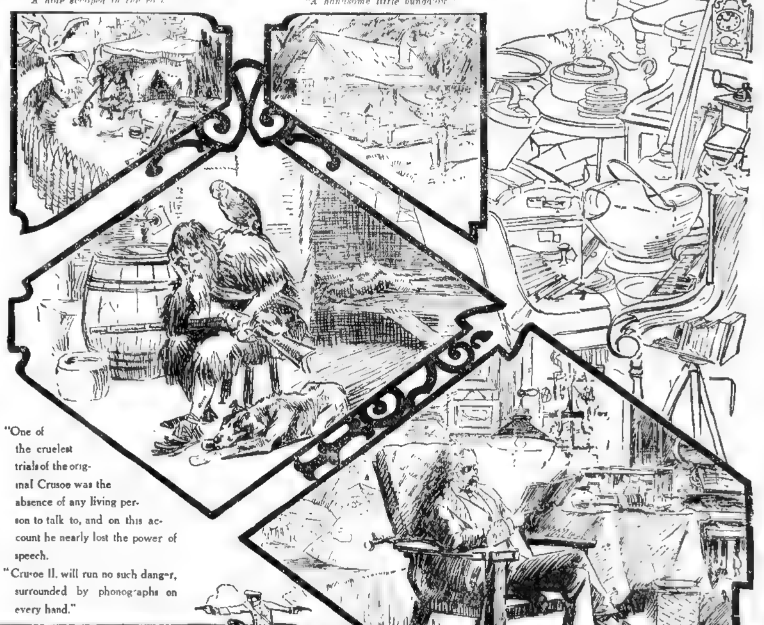
He will find among the passengers' belongings dozens of bags of golf sticks and boxes of the new fast balls. Thus he will be able to play the only really satisfactory game that a man can play alone.

So here we have the picture of our modern Crusoe complete, seated in his handsome bungalow, with artistic mahogany furniture and brocaded silk portieres, with handsome etchings and engravings on the walls, with companionable dogs, cats, parrots and phonographs all around, with wine and all kinds of good cheer on the sideboard, with an inexhaustible wine cellar and a [illegible] stand!

[illegible] only one thing lacking to make the situation [illegible] the absolute ideal of earthly happiness and comfort [illegible] that is Mrs. Crusoe.

"A hole scooped in the rock."

"A handsome little bungalow."



"One of the cruelest trials of the original Crusoe was the absence of any living person to talk to, and on this account he nearly lost the power of speech.

"Crusoe II. will run no such danger, surrounded by phonographs on every hand."

—SHAKESPEARE.

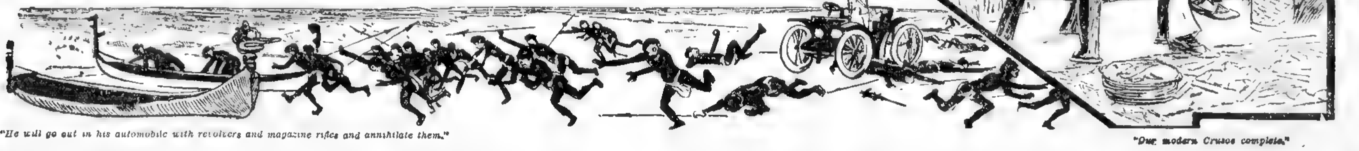
THIS quotation is a reminder that it was not the greatest English-speaking poet and the world's keenest student of human nature who was responsible for that pretty but dangerous maxim, "Absence makes the heart grow fonder." A cynical French proverb is also more truthful, "The absent are always in the wrong." A minor English poet wrote a couplet on the same idea, which is not a bad thing to remember.

To the one who goes—forgetfulness is easy,
To the one who stays—impossible.

There are few who have such a genius for loving that their love is proof against time and absence. Some such loves have gone into history, being so strong, eternal and hopeful that nothing could affect them—perhaps absence may make such rare love grow fonder.

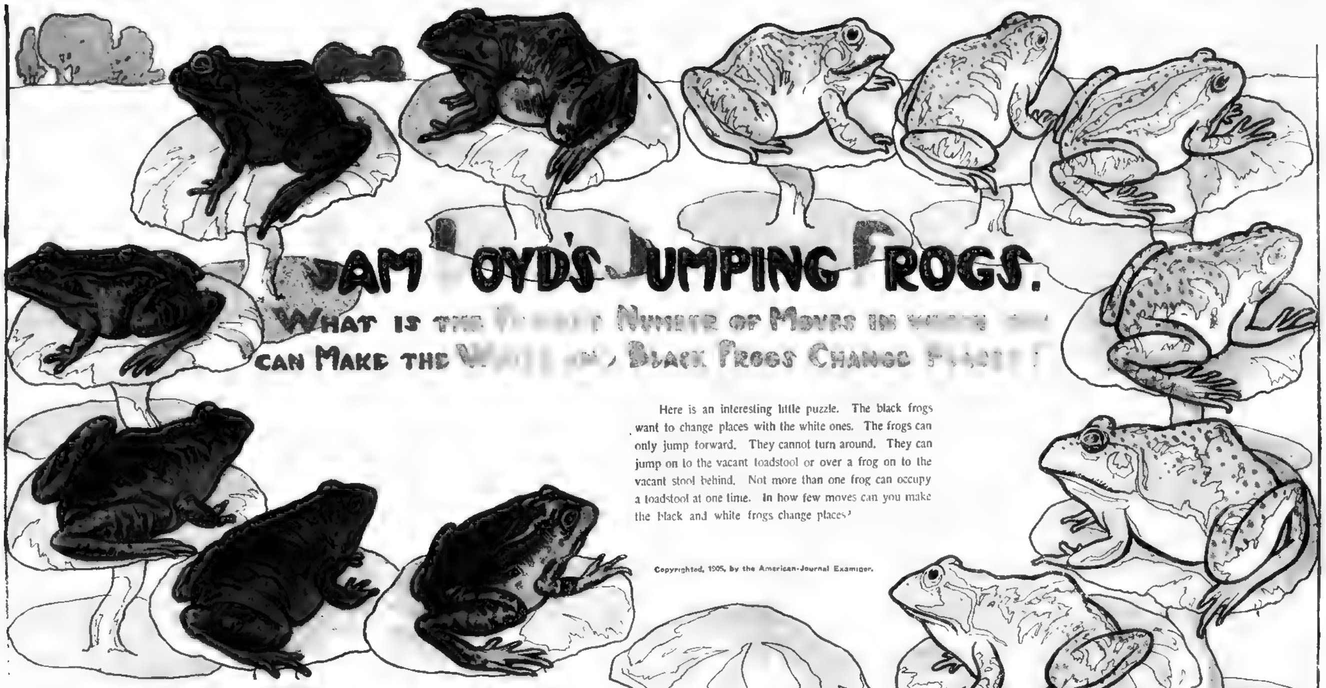
A short absence is an incentive to love, but prolonged absence eventually kills love, although sometimes its death may be a lingering one. It is the law of nature that time should obliterate; and indeed this is mercifully ordained, or else how could we live out our lives and attain peace and comparative happiness when heartrending bereavements deprive us of those we love? Absence lessens all love, but more especially the love between man and woman. In this love there is generally a certain amount of unrest and uncertainty, and it will not have a perennial life without mutual encouragement and occasional propinquity.

Absence may sometimes so hide the imperfections of our loved ones and tend to idealize their characters, that our love may actually acquire greater strength and steadfastness; but usually the severance of personal intercourse leads to a diminution of affection, and ofttimes results in its transference to another, absence making the heart grow fonder—of somebody else. Just as the retina of the eye retains the impression of a view but for a time, the imprint becoming less distinct as the days roll on, so does impression upon the memory wane when the subject of it has disappeared from our gaze, and Time, the handmaid of oblivion, relegates the once precious companion into a nebulous figure void of distinction, and no longer to exercise the magnetism of an ever present power.



"He will go out in his automobile with revolvers and magazine rifles and annihilate them."

"Our modern Crusoe complete."



SAM LOYD'S JUMPING FROGS.

WHAT IS THE FEWEST NUMBER OF MOVES IN WHICH YOU CAN MAKE THE WHITE AND BLACK FROGS CHANGE PLACES?

Here is an interesting little puzzle. The black frogs want to change places with the white ones. The frogs can only jump forward. They cannot turn around. They can jump on to the vacant toadstool or over a frog on to the vacant stool behind. Not more than one frog can occupy a toadstool at one time. In how few moves can you make the black and white frogs change places?

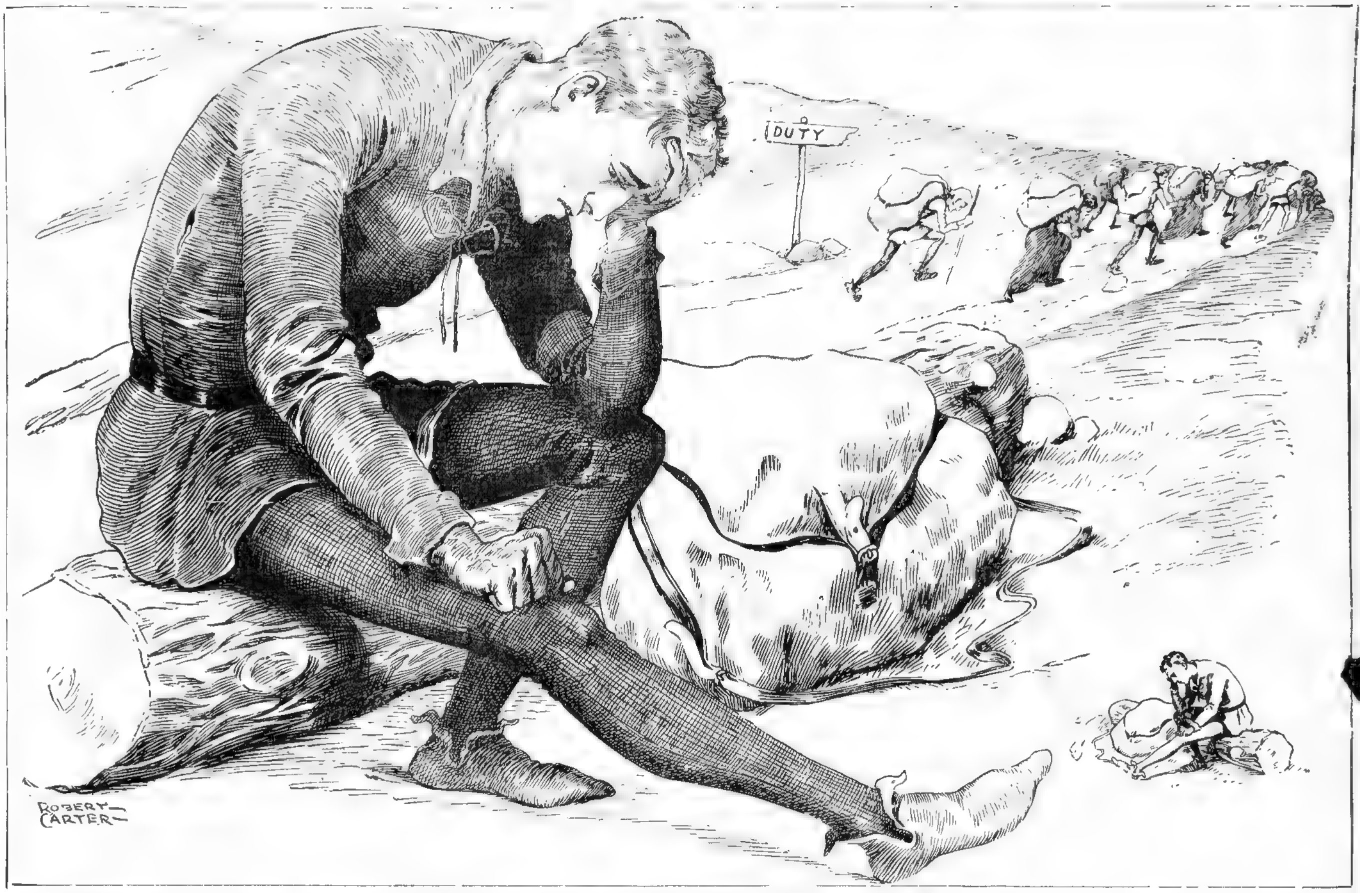
Don't Pity Yourself Too Much



Don't Exaggerate Your Own Importance, Your Own Size or Your Own Miseries. You Are an Ant in a Human Ant Hill. Be a Working Ant—Not a Ridiculous Insect Pitying Yourself

THE Summer is coming—the warm weather, long days, dusty roads, lazy impulses, selfish thinking about ourselves.

The cat on the sunny window ledge or the bird singing in the tree makes us feel sorry for ourselves.

The hot weather is heavy upon us. Our little power of will, feeble at best, sinks very low as the mercury climbs higher.

At this time of year and later as the sun grows hotter, many of us sink by the roadside—GIVE UP ALL EFFORT.

Our burden seems heavy and we drop it.

We forget that it will be all the heavier and harder to carry when we pick it up again. The load that is put down grows in weight every minute. Keep it off the ground, keep carrying it and you can make it light.

⁂

This is a talk to suggest that everyone of us should think a little less about his own troubles and difficulties and a little more about what he ought to do.

We propose to GENERALIZE and then to make one practical suggestion that may be valuable to many.

In the way of generalization read a few lines—theories are always tiresome and should be cut short.

Your only real property is THE CAPACITY TO MAKE MENTAL EFFORTS.

Is it not foolish to use up your brain power in PITYING YOURSELF? You know the people that grumble and growl.

They tire themselves more, take more out of themselves than the men that really work and forget their troubles in trying to do something.

Instead of wasting your force pitying yourself, try to think how lucky you are. Every newspaper tells you of a dozen creatures compared with whom you are ineffably happy.

DON'T WASTE YOUR POWER in grumbling. Don't waste time and effort pitying yourself.

Pity others, feel sorry for them. It is more wholesome morally and it does not paralyze your will and drag you down.

Be a real man—or, woman, or boy, or girl.

BE GAME.

Say to yourself: "Nothing can harm me as long as I do not give in. Life is no eternal picnic for me. But others are worse off, and anyhow I'll take pride in meeting things as they are and overcoming them. I did not make the world. I did not make myself. I'll take both as I find them, and do as well as I can with the material at hand. I'll not sit down and growl or pity myself like a bear with a sore head, anyhow."

⁂

So much for general advice. The world is full of hopeless failures that could have been successes had they devoted to real WORK one-half the energy DEVOTED TO COMPLAINING.

And now for one practical suggestion.

The Summer is coming, the days when nearly all men sag down in their efforts.

That is the time for you to work hard.

THAT IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO PASS OTHERS IN THE RACE.

You can steal any number of laps in the race of life BY DOING YOUR BEST IN SUMMER WHEN OTHERS ARE LAZY.

Don't put all your mind on your new coat, your new hat, your vacation or some idea of amusement.

Get all the fresh air you can.

Keep out of doors all you can.

But remember that every race is won AT THE END OF THE RACE, not at the beginning.

On New Year's Day eighty millions of us started off with fine resolutions. Seventy-eight millions or more of us are beginning to slow up.

DON'T SLOW UP. Run faster because you know that others are going slowly.

Make up your mind that by the first of next October you will have something better to show than tanned cheeks or a sunburned nose.

The lazy man's REST is the good man's OPPORTUNITY.

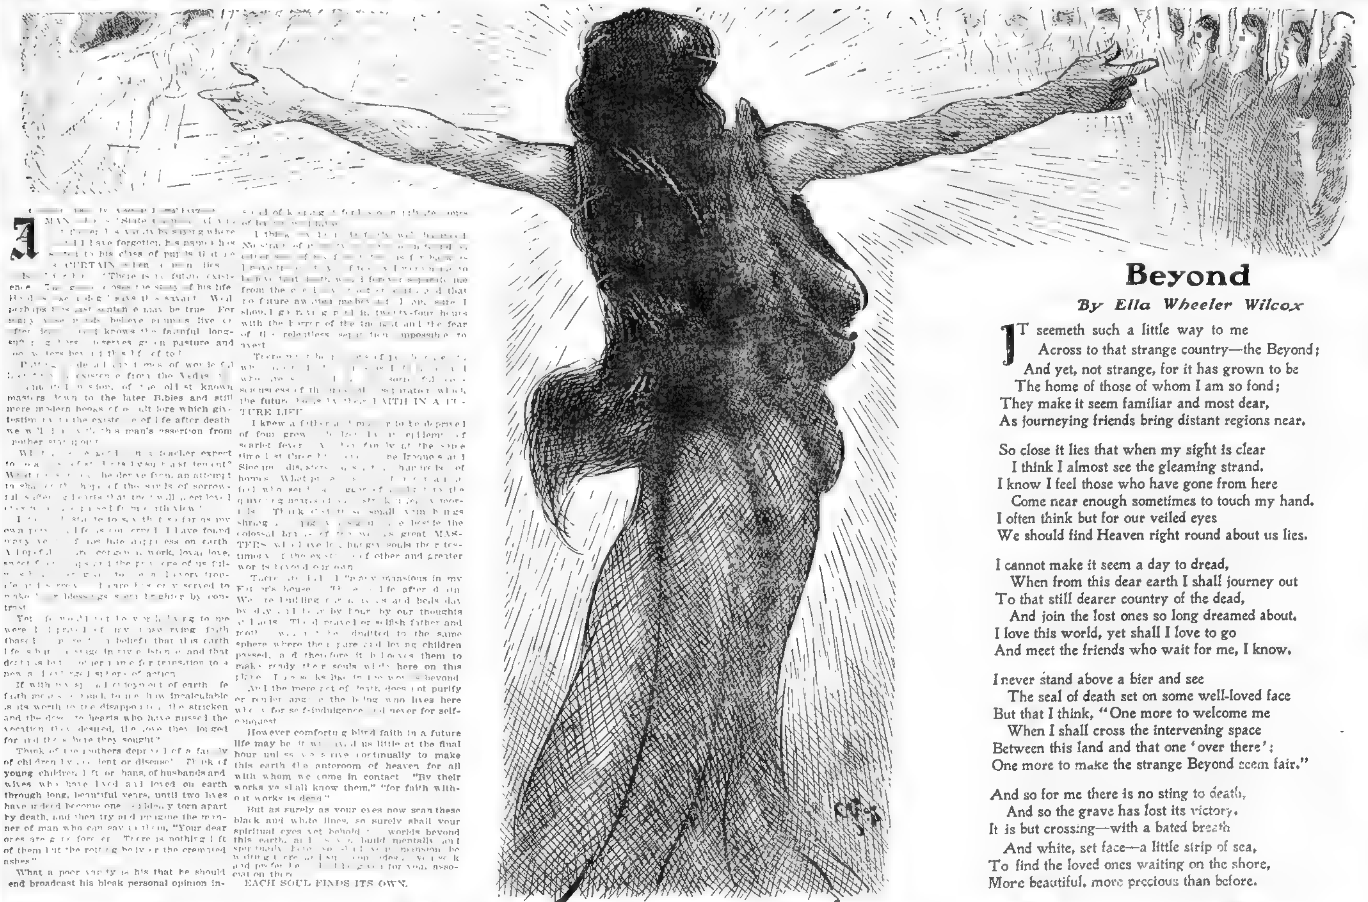
This is the season when the "Quitters" and failures reveal themselves.

Don't be among them.

Take this advice: Make the Summer a Summer of WORK—you will be glad next Fall—and in a few Summers you will have EARNED rest—which is better than stealing it from your life's succe

The Future Life

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox



[illegible] A MAN [illegible] State [illegible] his [illegible] by saying where [illegible] I have forgotten, his name [illegible] to his class of pupils that he [illegible] CERTAIN [illegible] "There is no future existence. [illegible] closes the story of his life. [illegible]" says the savant. Well, perhaps this last sentence may be true. For many wise minds believe animals live [illegible] after death [illegible] knows the faithful long-suffering [illegible] deserves green pasture and [illegible] waters beyond this life of toil.

But [illegible] all the times of wonderful [illegible] existence from the Vedas [illegible] of the oldest known masters down to the later Bibles and still more modern books of occult lore which give testimony to the existence of life after death we will [illegible] this man's assertion from another standpoint.

What [illegible] a teacher expect to [illegible] by such [illegible] statement? What [illegible] he derive from an attempt to shatter the hope of the souls of sorrowful suffering hearts that they will meet loved [illegible] from earthly view?

I [illegible] state to say that so far as my own personal life is concerned I have found many [illegible] of absolute happiness on earth. A hopeful [illegible] congenial work, loyal love, sweet [illegible] and the presence of us fellow [illegible] and every trouble [illegible] I have [illegible] served to make [illegible] blessings seem brighter by contrast.

Yet [illegible] would not be worth living to me were I deprived of my unswerving faith (based [illegible] belief) that this earth life is but [illegible] stage in our existence and that death is but [illegible] for transition to a new and enlarged sphere of action.

If with my [illegible] enjoyment of earth life faith means so much to me, how incalculable is its worth to the disappointed, the stricken and the desolate hearts who have missed the vocation they desired, the love they longed for and the [illegible] they sought?

Think of the mothers deprived of a family of children by accident or disease! Think of young children left orphans, of husbands and wives who have lived and loved on earth through long, beautiful years, until two lives have indeed become one, suddenly torn apart by death, and then try and imagine the manner of man who can say to them, "Your dear ones are gone forever. There is nothing left of them but the rotting body or the cremated ashes."

What a poor vanity is his that he should end broadcast his bleak personal opinion in- [illegible] of [illegible] for [illegible] of [illegible].

I think [illegible] No [illegible] of [illegible] I have [illegible] to believe that death was to forever separate me from the [illegible] and that no future awaited me beyond [illegible] I am sure I should go raving [illegible] in twenty-four hours with the horror of the [illegible] and the fear of the relentless separation impossible to avert.

There [illegible] who [illegible] who are [illegible] sorrowful consciousness of the [illegible] separation which the future [illegible] FAITH IN A FUTURE LIFE.

I knew a father and mother to be deprived of four grown children by an epidemic of scarlet fever. [illegible] family at the same time [illegible] the Iroquois and Slocum disasters [illegible] hundreds of homes. What [illegible] fool who sent [illegible] to the quivering hearts of [illegible] stricken [illegible] Think [illegible] small [illegible] beside the colossal brains of the world's great MASTERS who have left hungry souls their testimony of the existence of other and greater worlds beyond our own.

There are [illegible] "many mansions in my Father's house." [illegible] life after death. We are building [illegible] and beds day by day and hour by hour by our thoughts and acts. The depraved or selfish father and mother [illegible] admitted to the same sphere where their pure and loving children passed, and therefore it behooves them to make ready their souls while here on this plane. [illegible] seeks [illegible] in the worlds beyond.

And the mere act of death does not purify or render angelic the being who lives here [illegible] for self-indulgence and never for self-conquest.

However comforting blind faith in a future life may be it will avail us little at the final hour unless we strive continually to make this earth the anteroom of heaven for all with whom we come in contact. "By their works ye shall know them," "for faith without works is dead."

But as surely as your eyes now scan these black and white lines, so surely shall your spiritual eyes yet behold [illegible] worlds beyond this earth, and [illegible] build mentally and spiritually [illegible] mansion be waiting [illegible] and perfect [illegible] for your association there.

EACH SOUL FINDS ITS OWN.

Beyond

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

IT seemeth such a little way to me
Across to that strange country—the Beyond;
And yet, not strange, for it has grown to be
The home of those of whom I am so fond;
They make it seem familiar and most dear,
As journeying friends bring distant regions near.

So close it lies that when my sight is clear
I think I almost see the gleaming strand.
I know I feel those who have gone from here
Come near enough sometimes to touch my hand.
I often think but for our veiled eyes
We should find Heaven right round about us lies.

I cannot make it seem a day to dread,
When from this dear earth I shall journey out
To that still dearer country of the dead,
And join the lost ones so long dreamed about.
And meet the friends who wait for me, I know.

The seal of death set on some well-loved face
But that I think, "One more to welcome me
When I shall cross the intervening space
Between this land and that one 'over there';
One more to make the strange Beyond seem fair."

And so for me there is no sting to death,
And so the grave has lost its victory.
It is but crossing—with a bated breath
To find the loved ones waiting on the shore,
More beautiful, more precious than before.

The Coming of Halley's Great Comet

IT is still five years' journey away, [illegible] is coming on with constantly accelerated speed. For thirty years it has been [illegible] sunward and earthward from its far-away appelation, beyond the uttermost limits of the planetary system, but now that it is well within the sphere of [illegible] us [illegible] itself and [illegible] its energy [illegible] Everywhere [illegible] Mars and the [illegible] Like a race horse [illegible] spur and sees its competitors struggling for the lead, its flanks begin to [illegible] straightens in the wind [illegible] forward, one can almost hear the thunder of the approaching hoofbeats falling faster and faster, and the eyes of the [illegible] spectators are turned in fascination [illegible] know [illegible] grand [illegible]

But for the great majority of mankind in civilized lands the return of Halley's comet will be [illegible] occasion for rejoicing at the opportunity to see one of the rarest of celestial spectacles. At some of its former returns [illegible] most [illegible] it would [illegible] At other [illegible] although always [illegible] it has been plainly visible to the naked eye and [illegible] extraordinary convulsions going on [illegible] nucleus.

It may thrill all beholders with its luminous wonders, and it may be comparatively quiescent and unimpressive, but it is certain that it will be [illegible] object [illegible] discovered [illegible] opportunity. [illegible] all the [illegible] and methods of research [illegible] astronomy to the front in the past half century have been invented since its last appearance, and they will be turned upon it with an enthusiasm which no rare [illegible] Every one of the great comets that have been visible since 1835 has come unexpectedly and taken the astronomers by surprise. But Halley's comet cannot creep up on them from ambush. It has fallen into their [illegible] and [illegible] its [illegible] its position and [illegible] its movements.

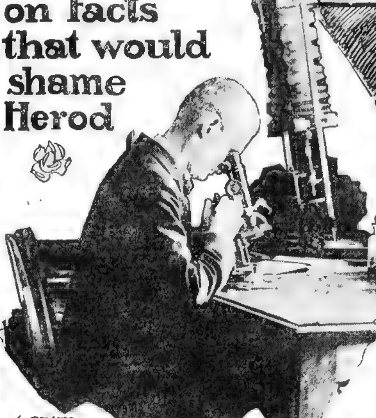
LABORATORY OF STATE BOARD OF HEALTH



A STATE CHEMIST AT WORK.

How Impure Foods Kill the Babies.

[illegible]

Testing Foods at Laboratory of State Board of Health at the State House

What the Massachusetts State Board of Health Is Doing to Stop the Murder of the Innocents—Avarice Alone Responsible.

A half a million babies [illegible] every year is the tribute the United States pays to adulterated foods.

Paul Pierce, editor of "What to Eat," and superintendent of the food exhibit at the St. Louis exposition, is authority for the statement.

From the first day of every January to the last day of every December something like 750,000 babies die in this country. Mr. Pierce says two-thirds of these [illegible] unnecessary and directly [illegible] to the manufacturers who make and sell poison foods and the legislators who allow them to do it.

It is this statement that has aroused State officials throughout the country to a sense of their responsibility and caused activity on the part of good citizens everywhere in a heightened endeavor to secure the passage of laws forbidding adulteration of food products. To the present moment the strength of the great manufacturers, who [illegible] were to stop [illegible] poisoning the babies, has [illegible] Washington for remedial [illegible] sence of [illegible] laws [illegible] Massachusetts, [illegible] and consumption [illegible] should [illegible] far and away [illegible] United States, both [illegible] ment.

This statement of Paul Pierce, added to other [illegible] as great [illegible] much to do [illegible] awakening of public sentiment [illegible] on this question of baby murder—it is surely nothing less than semi-legalized baby murder. The demand throughout the [illegible] for better food [illegible] better [illegible] of existing laws and a fe[illegible] [illegible] the United States Senate will [illegible] listen to the voice of the people rather than the plea of the poisoners.

This will be when the people awakened to the crime they have been tolerating speak to their legislators with loud enough voice.

To the words of Paul Pierce have been added the following, by Dr. Big[illegible] the Division [illegible] of the United States [illegible] of Chemistry:

"The most common method of milk adulteration is by skimming then watering. Sometimes it isn't skimmed, but at any event it's watered, which causes it to become the peculiar blue familiar to all housewives. Its natural color is restored by arnotto, a coloring matter, or more commonly a yellow coal-tar derivative. A form of adulteration most prevalent [illegible] skimming and diluting, however, is the adding of [illegible] preservatives. [illegible] [illegible] was used, but now a dilute solution of formaldehyde is more frequently introduced than all other preservatives."

Professor [illegible] of Wilkesbarre says that formaldehyde is obtained from wood alcohol by passing the vapor over [illegible] copper and is used for disinfecting purposes. It gives milk a rubbery [illegible] that makes it injurious to health but keeps it sweet for a much longer time than it would otherwise.

[illegible] and Dr. Cochran, State chemist and professor of chemistry respectively at the Westchester Normal School, say that formaldehyde is a dangerous poison frequently used in embalming [illegible] [illegible] positively [illegible] persons.

"Pure milk," says [illegible] Dodge, a writer [illegible] investigating this subject [illegible] [illegible] Poisoned [illegible] [illegible] country."

The history of the past [illegible] weeks has demonstrated what Massachusetts is doing to save health and life by the prosecution of [illegible] manufacturers and dealers [illegible] some very large [illegible] who have violated the health laws of the State, thus threatening the lives of [illegible] adults as well.

If [illegible] of Boston were [illegible] to [illegible] women or children, and were to prevent it and hale the conspirators before a court of justice, Massachusetts would ring with the echoes of their acumen and fidelity.

[illegible] Beacon Hill there is at work every day in the year a police force that discovers and prevents the poisoning of [illegible] every day [illegible] helpless children [illegible] State [illegible] being done [illegible] those who know [illegible] appreciation of its magnitude.

This protective force, with its oversight of the health and lives of the people of Massachusetts, is the State Board of Health.

It does its work quietly, without blare of trumpets or rattle of drums. Day [illegible] it sends out its agents, collect samples of food, drink and drugs [illegible] in the State [illegible] analysts [illegible] [illegible] the ingredients of all things that go into their stomachs [illegible] out of what they are made.

Few people have any idea of the range of ingenuity exhibited by American manufacturers, who, after having secured the passage of a law prohibiting the importation of adulterated food, themselves manufacture $[illegible]000,000 worth of it annually.

Says Paul Pierce:

"No part of the raw product goes to waste in the American factory. It is openly boasted by the Chicago packer that nothing of the hog escapes but the squeal. So it might be said of the cannery that nothing escapes of the fruit and vegetables but the smell. In assorting the farm produce in the factory there is found much that is good and much [illegible] bad, but to [illegible] bad [illegible] use for it as material for the manufacture of some product or other. No matter how tainted it may have become before or after the shipment to the factory, it is never so bad that it cannot be made into some comestible which the manufacturer deems fit to be eaten by some class of America's population."

P[illegible] of facts given to [illegible] [illegible] the lack of attention to the facts they [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of horse [illegible] [illegible] extracts [illegible] [illegible] commission houses and [illegible] from the sewers are [illegible] food adulteration [illegible] [illegible] Mr. Pierce.

Nor [illegible] greedy manufacturer [illegible] [illegible] American [illegible] [illegible] food [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] poisons [illegible] for these poisons that the Board of Health analysts of the Massachusetts State House search from day to day. When they find them somebody gets arrested and fined.

In the past it has frequently occurred that there has been little publicity [illegible] great manufacturer [illegible] discovered to have [illegible] for greed [illegible] [illegible] Trust was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] for a trust [illegible] resources, not the least of which is the ability to prevent [illegible] papers from printing [illegible].

But while not all its work is given the publicity it deserves, the State Board of Health keeps working day in and day out.

Its offices [illegible] on the first floor of the State House. It is on the fifth floor, however, that the most useful work is done [illegible] the laboratories, where [illegible] work testing, examining, analyzing with retorts, test tubes and microscopes. It is as a result of their reports that the prosecutions by law are made.

They, with their direct employers the members of the Board of Health, stand between the criminal manufacturers and salesmen who would cause sickness or death for the additional money in the impure product and the public. Especially they stand as protectors of the lives of little children, first because children are more susceptible to the poisons in adulterated foods, second because no food is more adulterated than milk, and babies are the first and greatest sufferers from this.

To every one of the several composing the State Board of Health is due some of the credit for the way in which Massachusetts has set an example to the rest of the United States in regard to its laws regarding adulterations and its punishment of their violators, but it is upon Dr. Charles Harrington, secretary of the board, that the weight of the most publicity naturally falls.

Dr. Harrington gave me an interview on the work of the [illegible] [illegible] Harrington seems to be [illegible] really means it. He would prefer that I should get my facts from various printed reports from other officers or from collated statistics.

Massachusetts has reason to be proud of her State Board. It has been charged [illegible] [illegible] of [illegible] its duty [illegible] pressure that might have been put upon the members [illegible] desire to subject [illegible] quickly [illegible] who is responsible to "approach" [illegible] case of the great [illegible] [illegible] a business that had been [illegible] at an advertising cost of [illegible] of a million dollars [illegible] because of Massachusetts [illegible] [illegible] State [illegible] except in BOSTON AMERICAN.

The [illegible] that the Massachusetts Board of Health is a big board. [illegible] [illegible] is a big man. He is as big [illegible] as he is mentally or morally. He is a pleasant man to meet [illegible] pleasant smile and [illegible] laugh, but his eyes can look out sternly enough through his big glasses and his [illegible] heavy and [illegible] jaw of a stubborn fighter.

My first question was the question of a kindergartner:

"Why [illegible] adulterate food and drink?"

His reply was equally simple.

"To make money.

"I don't suppose," he said, "that there is always a direct intention to interfere on the part of manufacturers who adulterate their product to make a poisonous result [illegible]. It is simply that they are greedy, perhaps that competition has made them either sell an inferior product or go out of business. Whatever the cause, it results in their substituting some kind of adulterant. These are not always poisonous. In fact it is perfectly proper for many kinds of adulterated foods to be sold in Massachusetts, provided the ingredients are plainly stamped on the label."

"What is adulterated most in Massachusetts?"

"Milk. [illegible] The [illegible] adulterant [illegible] water and [illegible] cost anything. We spend more than one-half of our appropriation in the inspection and prosecution of milk dealers."

"And is this the most harmful?"

"It is one of the most wicked, because the effect of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] blue milk [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] get [illegible] from pure milk [illegible] [illegible] depends upon milk [illegible] [illegible] of the butter fat that should be present [illegible] [illegible] per cent [illegible] [illegible]

Sharon Bazaar at Horticultural Hall Was the Great Event of the Week and Season.

The bazaar in aid of the Sharon Sanatorium at Horticultural Hall was [illegible] event of the week, if not the event of the season. It has been a great [illegible]ess, artistically, socially and financially. It was originally advertised that [illegible]sday would be the last day, but it was finally decided to keep it open [illegible]ghout Friday from 10 until 6 o'clock. Two thousand tickets were sold [illegible]e opening day, and checks were received from friends to the amount of [illegible]

The first day was typical of all of the following, and splendid results [illegible] been the reward of the great labor and time spent in perfecting so de[illegible]ful and interesting an entertainment. Among the scores of society [illegible] and maids who contributed largely to the success of the enterprise were Mrs. Harold Jefferson Coolidge, Mrs. DeFord Bigelow, Mrs. Henry Morse-Channing, Mrs. Elton Clark, Mrs. Frederick S. Dabney, Mrs. Richard C. Storey, Miss Constance Amory, Miss Leila Burnett, Miss Mary Curtis, the Misses Clemence and Elizabeth Crafts, the Misses Cunningham, Miss Fanny Dwight, Miss Eloise Derby, the Misses Fay, Miss Catherine Gardner, Miss Barbara Higginson, Miss Juliet Higginson, Miss Adelaide Hooper, Miss Nina Hopkins, Miss Helen Prince, Miss Dorothy Quincy, Miss Harriet Robeson, Miss Eleanora Sears, Miss Bessie Stone, Miss Hannah Stevenson, Miss Pricilla Stackpole, Miss Susan Thayer, Miss Constance Williams, Miss Lois Watson, Miss Margaret Winthrop and Miss Alice West.

Boston has never seen a more unique exhibition of the Orient and its [illegible] beauty than that which called together the society element of this [illegible] in behalf of the Sharon Sanatorium. The Turkish harem, with its be[illegible]bed and bewigged beauties, smoking cigarettes with the air of one born [illegible] weed, was a novel but highly interesting spectacle to dignified and [illegible]us-minded Boston.

[illegible] Alice Roosevelt was present on the opening day, being accompanied [illegible] Eleanora Sears. Miss Roosevelt was gowned in a simple tailor-made [illegible] of brown checked cheviot. She purchased a handsome French hat at [illegible] millinery booth, and took a chance on the $500 gold watch offered by [illegible] Lee.

In addition to the various stalls, buffet luncheons, tea and table d'hote [illegible]rs were served in the basement. The luncheons were in charge of Mrs [illegible]erick Thayer, Mrs. Alfred R. Weld presided over the destinies of the [illegible]om, and Mrs. Jacob Hecht had charge of the table d'hote dinners. The dinners were served from 3 to 6 by the society debutantes, some particularly charming bud acting as head waitress each evening. Entertainments were given each afternoon at 3, 4 and 5 o'clock, and at 8 and 9 in the evening, consisting of marionettes, music, trick bicycling, fancy dancing by members of the Vincent Club, music, lectures and stereopticon views of travel in the Far East by Dr. W. L. Smith, who was formerly physician to the Shah of Persia, and other stunts by the different members of society. The great feature of Wednesday evening's entertainment was the minstrel performance given by leading physicians of the city. They were called the "Shady Sharon Shouters." Le Baron Russell was made up as the tough manager of the show, and the chorus was composed of Dr. D. Crosby Greene, Lawrence K. Hill, Dr. John B. Hawes, 2d, Dr. John Homans, Albert Schultz, Gerald Blake, Arthur G. Chickering and Charles Drew.

Acts Like Oxygen

Liquozone goes into the stomach, into the bowels and into the blood, to [illegible] the blood goes. No germ [illegible] none can resist it. [illegible] are inevitable, for a germ disease must end when the germs are [illegible]. Then Liquozone, acting as a [illegible] tonic, quickly restores a condition of perfect health. Diseases [illegible] medicine for years yield at once to Liquozone, and it cures diseases which medicine never cures. Half the people you meet—wherever you are—can tell you of cures that were made by it.

Germ Diseases

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone attacks the germs wherever they are. And when the germs which cause a disease are destroyed, the disease must end, and forever. That is inevitable.

Afraid Her Cat Might Get Freckled

MY little girl, Nellie Bess, four years old, one day was patting her kitten that lay asleep in her lap. The sun was shining through the window on them and she looked up and said:

"Ma, pull down the curtain; I don't want this cat to get freckled."

NEVER was there such a field for child study as the "Bright Sayings" columns of the BOSTON AMERICAN.

Men and women the country over are pondering how to understand the child nature. Let them read the bright things that the children of New England are saying as they are written to the BOSTON AMERICAN by their fond parents or admiring relatives.

Hundreds of letters are still coming in to the Bright Sayings Editor every day. But the contest must end. Next week is your last opportunity to compete for the daily prize of six splendid photographs of your child. The contest will close next Sunday.

There are few rules for this contest. But those few are necessary and important. Write on one side of the paper only. Keep your letter inside of one hundred words. Give the child's name, your own name and your address. Direct your letter to "Bright Sayings Editor," BOSTON AMERICAN, No. 80-82 Summer street, Boston, Mass.

FORGOT BABY'S HAIR

My little boy, four years old, stood looking intently at his baby brother. Putting his hand on baby's head he said:

WOULD SHUT GOD OUT

My little daughter Ray, aged three and a half years, was walking with me through a strip of woods near our home. I noticed that she was unusually silent and kept looking from time to time up at the trees whose branches and leaves shut out the sun completely.

"Mamma," said she suddenly, "if papa doesn't trim up these trees soon there won't be any holes for God to see us through."

Danderine

GREW MISS LEWIS' HAIR

AND WE CAN

PROVE IT

The Great Danderine Never Fails to Produce the Desired Results

MISS Lewis' hair was very thin and it was less than two feet in length when she began using Danderine. She says her hair and scalp are now fairly teeming with new life and vigor.

That's the main secret of this great remedy's success as a hair grower. It enlivens, invigorates and fairly electrifies the hair glands and tissues of the scalp, causing unusual and unheard-of activity on the part of these two most important organs, resulting in a strenuous and continuous growth of the hair.

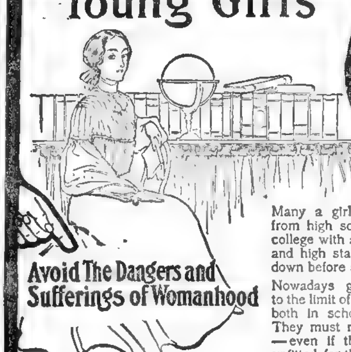
> January 3, 1905.
>
> Dear Doctor Knowlton:—
>
> You know I told you in my first letter that my hair would not reach much below my shoulders, and that all of it together only made one tiny braid.
>
> I am sending you my photograph, which I had taken at Stevens Bros. It tells the whole story better than I can tell it.
>
> Everybody I know is using Danderine, so you see I am doing something to show my appreciation.
>
> Sincerely yours, (Miss) EVA LEWIS.

Danderine makes the scalp healthy and fertile and keeps it so. It is the greatest scalp fertilizer and therefore the greatest hair-producing remedy the world has ever known. It is a natural food and a wholesome medicine for both the hair and scalp. Even a 25c bottle of it will put more genuine life in your hair than a gallon of any other hair tonic ever made. It shows results from the very start.

NOW at all druggists in three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1. per bottle

FREE. To show how quickly Danderine acts we will send a large sample free by return mail to any one who sends this advertisement to the Knowlton Danderine Co., Chicago, with their name and address and 10 cents in silver or stamps to pay postage.

Young Girls



Avoid The Dangers and Sufferings of Womanhood

Many a girl who graduates from high school or female college with a brilliant record and high standing is broken down before she is twenty.

Nowadays girls are pushed to the limit of their endurance both in school and society. They must make a success—even if they are forever unfitted for the larger school of life and debarred from wedded happiness and the bliss of motherhood.

At this time of life, when just entering upon womanhood, nature makes heavy drains upon the vitality, especially at each monthly period, the most wonderful of all tonic restorative medicines for women, will tide a young girl over this trying time and bring her safely into strong, noble, beautiful womanhood.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Experience of a Beautiful High School Girl

Her First Letter.

MY DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I write to see if you can suggest some means to cure me. A little more than a year ago I was sick with menstruation for the first time, and since then I have been sick all the time in some way or other and suffered with painful and irregular menstruation. I went to a summer resort for my health and was doctored all summer, but to no effect. I have not menstruated for two months and thought I would see if you could do me any good. I attend High School and would not like to miss any time if it is possible. MARION BARBER, North Adams, Mass.

Miss Barber writes again after two years

MY DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:

Sometime ago I wrote to you for advice, being troubled with irregular and painful menstruation and womb disease. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and using the Sanative Wash, and I am glad to say I am completely cured and have not had any sickness since. I wish to thank you for your kind advice and shall recommend your medicine to my girl friends. MARION BARBER, 101 Bracewell Ave., North Adams, Mass.

Free Advice for Young Girls

All young girls are earnestly urged to write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Thousands of women are well, strong, and beautiful to-day because they made a confidant of Mrs. Pinkham and followed her instructions at this critical time of their lives.

RAW BLEEDING SCALY ECZEMA

CURED BY CUTICURA

Blessed Relief After First Application and First Real Sleep in Weeks—Facts of This Wonderful Cure by Cuticura Vouched for by Mrs. Hunt's Neighbors.

"Words cannot describe the terrible Eczema I suffered with. It broke out on my head and kept spreading, until it covered my whole body. I was almost a solid mass of sores from head to foot. I looked more like a piece of raw beef than a human being. The pain and agony I endured seemed more than I could bear.

"Blood and pus oozed from the great sore on my scalp, from under my finger nails, and nearly all over my body. My ears were so crusted and swollen I was afraid they would break off. Every hair in my head fell out. I could not sit down, for my clothes would stick to the raw and bleeding flesh, making me cry out from the pain.

My family doctor did all he could, but I got worse and worse. My condition was awful. I did not think I could live, and wanted death to come and end my frightful sufferings.

"In this condition my mother-in-law begged me try the Cuticura Remedies. I said I would, but had no hope of recovery. But oh, what blessed relief I experienced after applying Cuticura Ointment. It cooled the bleeding and itching flesh and brought me the first real sleep I had had in weeks. It was as grateful as ice to a burning tongue. I would bathe with warm water and Cuticura Soap, then apply the Ointment freely. I also took the Resolvent for the blood. In a short time the sore stopped running, the flesh began to heal, and I knew I was to get well again. Then the hair on my head began to grow, and in a short time I was completely cured. But I kept on taking the Cuticura Remedies, as they did me so much good I did not want to stop them.

"My cure was so wonderful I thought I would write you about it. I cannot praise Cuticura enough. I wish I could tell everybody who has Eczema to use Cuticura. My condition was so terrible that what cured me cannot fail to cure anybody of this awful disease. If any one doubts the truth of this letter, tell them to write to me.

Mystery of the Lost Braley Baby Is Made Deeper by "Third Degree"

Braley farmhouses, missing baby, father, mother and remaining child of the household figuring in New Hampshire mystery.

PARENTS OF CHILD, FARMHAND AND NEIGHBORS QUIZZED.

Danbury, N. H., May 6.—County Solicitor Coblegh, of Lebanon, arrived at Wild's Meadows late this afternoon, accompanied by High Sheriff Arthur [illegible] Davis of Woodsville, and Deputy Sheriffs Murray and Stearns. They made a thorough survey of the Braley farm, where two-year-old Elwin Braley disappeared, and then, going to the nearby house of Orison Sargent, [illegible] people brought before them for examination.

Ernest R. Braley and his wife, parents of the child; "Grandma" Braley; Frank Tobine, owner of the farm; Harry Watkins, a farmhand, and James [illegible] Walker, a neighbor, were brought in and cross-examined by County Solicitor Coblegh.

This application of the "third degree" developed a number of statements not previously made. Mrs. Braley was examined with especial severity. She stuck to the story she has told since the disappearance, but admitted that on the child's dress were a number of pearl buttons similar to those found with bits of charred bone in the ash box. She said that she had

MURDERED?

Two-thirds of the people in Danbury, N. H., believe so, and arrests would have been made before now if there was any evidence to prove that he is really dead.

the village. For miles back into the country in all directions extends the remainder [illegible]

Surrounded by Mountains.

On every side stand frowning the Cardigan Mountains, bleak, granite-strewn and divided in covering between sparse undergrowth and hoary forest. Among the hills wind narrow, rutty roads, scarred by the [illegible]. Follow the main road out of the village to the north a winding, climbing distance of five or six good [illegible] and you come to the Braley farm, where little Elwin Braley, twenty-nine months old, toddled a week ago last Thursday as though from the face of the earth.

There are three explanations that might [illegible] disappearance of a [illegible] first seems [illegible] the known facts of the case. As to the other two there are arguments that go to to indicate either and on the other hand developments that seem to indicate the improbability of each.

Even by Danbury standards, which are elastic, the Braleys are poor. They are so [illegible]

Boy Chased Cows.

[illegible] the door she looked back [illegible] sturdily toward a little [illegible] which he was accustomed to play, a few feet away. A few seconds later she heard him cry.

This, she says, was his common habit when she left him. The tone of his voice gave no indication of unusual reason. The cry was sharp, short, peevish. She paid no attention, and heard no more. Perhaps ten minutes, but she thinks not more than three or five, passed before she again thought to look after the child. From the door she could not see him. From the front of the house he was still not in sight. To this day she has not seen him.

Soon Gave the Alarm.

She gave the alarm soon—to Tobine and the hired man behind the barn within a few moments, to the rest of the neighborhood within the hour. Before noon a dozen were searching for the child; by night the dozen had grown to forty. Within the next few days the forty became three or four hundred.

For three miles in every direction the country has been searched—highway and meadow, wood and mountain, trout stream and pond. Searchers have gone over every foot of ground from the top of the mountain to its base. They have peered into caverns, crawled under interlocked boughs, dragged the bottom of black-watered ponds. The unskilled searching of the first day's posse has been succeeded by the systematic quest of great parties led by the highest police officials of the county. And while all the country for miles around has been scoured, the farm itself has not been neglected. Under direction of the Board of Selectmen the acres have been gone over as with a fine-toothed comb. House and barn cellars have been dug up, the chimneys have been searched. Holes have been cut into the walls. Every box and barrel on the place has been emptied. Any earth on the farm that looked as though recently disturbed has been the place for a search.

Bones and Buttons Found.

As a result the authorities have found the bones of a recently interred horse, a miscellaneous collection of much charred bones which the family says are the remains of a hedgehog, which Dr. Frost, professor of anatomy at Dartmouth College, will examine to see if they are human, and four charred pearl buttons.

Unless these bones or these buttons are relics of the child the searchers have found no slightest trace of Elwin Braley.

Under any circumstance which takes for true the united words of Mrs. Braley, Frank Tobine and the farmhand Wilkins, there was but one direction in which the child could have disappeared.

Across the road from the house to the east, is a pair of bars. Through these, straight ahead, looms a hill two hundred yards in length, very steep, and bare of all vegetation save Winter-browned grass. Elwin Braley's little feet, encased, as they were, in shoes two sizes too large, would have toiled a full half hour, at least, to climb to the shelter of the stunted firs on the summit, even if his courage for the walk had not long earlier departed.

That a grown man would be as adept as a climber as he was fortunate if he could, by climbing this hill, evade being seen within less than a dozen or fifteen minutes. The theory that the child, either [illegible] or in the arms of a possible abductor, went up that hill, may be entirely eliminated as impossible.

Child Was Not Seen on Road.

Down the road, to the south, two men stood talking in the yard of the next house, a scant eighth of a mile away. The child did not pass there. From their place back of the barn Tobine and Wilkins commanded a perfect and constant view of the road to the north. The child did not pass there. Had he gone to the west Tobine must have seen him on one side of the barn; his mother's view from her dining room window commanded his path on the other.

This would seem to eliminate every possible direction of travel. One, however, is left. To the east, across the road from the house and through that pair of bars whence one comes to the grass-covered hill, there is a way. If, as soon as you pass through that barway, you turn sharply to the left and walk parallel with the road for fifty yards or so, you will come to a tongue of fir trees that reaches down from the slope and will shelter you from view as you ascend the hill. Also, as the Braley farm is on the side of the mountain and the road is built up a little, you would pass out of sight from the house almost as soon as you turned to the left.

This, then, must be the way the child went, it would seem. And so small are the chances that of all the ways he might run away, a wandering toddler would take the one sole direction that would keep him out of sight of his home, and that a complicated one, that it would seem almost safe to believe that he did not disappear of his own volition, and discard entirely the theory that the case is simply one of a lost child. This, even if it were not for the probability that so little a child would not go far, and the fact that for three miles in that direction every rod has been traversed by searchers without coming upon so much as a shred of torn clothing or a wisp of white hair.

As to Murder Theory.

How of the murder theory?

It cannot be disputed that two of every three Danbury folk wisely wag their heads and deliver their opinion that the child has been killed and its body burned or concealed upon the farm.

There are some queer people in Danbury, people whose families have married and intermarried, with and without ceremonies, until they have developed a peculiar strain of their own blood that in baser animals is called "in bred." This condition is found in many New England communities far back from the cities. Its root lies in the original settlement of small places by but one or two families, and a consequent blood mixture. Such a place seems to be Wild's Meadows. Such a family seems to be the Braleys. Half the people in Danbury are more or less related to them; half of the relatives are on one side or the other of a long-standing cause-forgotten feud and do not speak to one another.

Ernest Braley is young and slight and lean—a typical product of his environment. His sun-tanned face is thin, with a pronounced nose, big brown eyes, a straggling moustache, wing-sailing ears, and the long hair that is no mark of peculiarity here. He talks with a pronounced nasal accent. "A good worker when he can have his own way," says his boss of him. Nobody says anything definitely worse.

Father Was Kidnapped.

Braley himself was kidnapped when he was a child. He says he firmly believes that in that kidnapping may be found a clue to the secret of little Elwin's disappearance.

It was his mother who took him away from his grandfather. The story of how his mother married his uncle, then his father, then three or four other men, until a conviction for bigamy ended the chapter, is neither pretty nor worthy of pride. Yet if, in telling it, Ernest Braley shows no pride, neither does he show chagrin.

It was fifteen years ago, when he was eight years old, that his mother got him away from his grandparents for a whole [illegible] it was that a man, a stranger, met him on the road [illegible] giving him candy and a shiny half dollar. The ride ended at the village, whence his mother, who met the man, carried him to Lynn. In the following Spring he was [illegible] to his father [illegible] not been seen in this village for many years. Neither Braley nor his father knows if [illegible]

[illegible] Braley and his wife [illegible] safety of [illegible] toward [illegible] the [illegible] baby's disappearance. She was hysterical when her other baby died. She is very composed now.

Mother From South Boston.

Mrs. Braley is of a somewhat different up-bringing from her husband. She is a South Boston girl. In that place her father is a respected citizen, a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity and other orders. She talks without the [illegible]

She is small and rather good looking. [illegible] probably be very good looking [illegible] and eyes are dark. Her figure is shapely. Her diction is usually good. Her voice, although more querulous than it ought to be at twenty, indicates a considerable trace of refinement. She has been married some four years. She met Braley in Danbury, where her father owns a place and her mother lives much of the time.

"I don't know what to believe," she said to-day, "but I don't believe Elwin is dead. I think he was kidnapped, and I shall never think anything else until it is proven. No, I don't think he was just kidnapped because somebody saw him and wanted him; and nobody would take him to get money from us, because we haven't got any. I believe he was taken for revenge. I haven't got an enemy in the world that I know of, but my husband might have. He must speak for himself."

Of what speaking for himself her husband did this story has heretofore told.

Out in the yard yesterday the search was proceeding. A conglomerate collection of townsfolk, ranging from the dignified authoritative members of the Board of Selectmen and the deputy sheriff and his assistants to the rag tag and bobtail of Wild's Meadow's strangest denizens, was searching for clews.

"They've turned everything about the place over, and dug up the yard and the barn, and even made new holes into my chimneys," said Frank Tobine, philosophically. "Well, much luck to 'em. I hope they find something."

Bones Discovered.

Out of a shed had come a squad of searchers, bearing an ash box, whence, with much pomp, they took many fresh [illegible] and a score of particles of bone. Here was the time, if there was guilt within the place, for it to manifest itself. Frank Tobine came into the house an hour later with the first news the mother [illegible] of it.

"They found some bones." His information was to anybody and nobody in particular. Mrs. Braley, "Gran'ma" Braley [illegible]

"What kind of bones?" I asked.

[illegible] We dressed a couple of hedgehogs and ate 'em a fortnight or so ago. [illegible] chicken or beef [illegible] are hedgehog."

Mrs. Braley betrayed no more interest than if the search were not being made with a hope in the heart of three-quarters of the searchers that they would find evidence to place a great crime upon the shoulders of someone in the house.

Neither did she show emotion when she [illegible] this morning that Dr. Frost, professor of anatomy at Dartmouth College [illegible]

"Child Wasn't Murdered."

The other score or so of charred bone ends will go to Dr. Frost [illegible] or to-morrow, and County Solicitor Cobleigh will be in Grafton—the Braley house chances to be just across the line in that town—to take any official action that the professor's report may make advisable. If the bones are human, somebody will be arrested, and quickly.

If the belief could be father to the fact, there is little doubt that the people of Danbury would prove this case a murder.

Saw Strange Man.

To give color to the kidnapping theory there is the evidence of the Sulloway boy. He is twelve years old, son of Congressman Sulloway, who has a large estate a mile or so from the Braley farm, and reputed to be truthful and not imaginative. You have probably read how, after driving his sister to the school which she teaches, he, a half mile or so north of the Braley house, passed a sinister-looking stranger the morning of the disappearance, walking slowly beside a sweaty horse which was hitched to a buggy. Somewhat frightened, young Sulloway whipped up and put as much distance as possible between him and the [illegible]. Not [illegible] the thoughtlessness of youth did he connect this incident with the disappearance and tell of it for two or three days."

ADVERTISE YOUR WANTS IN THE BOSTON AMERICAN

Announcement No. 3.

In previous announcements we have shown how our world wide reputation has been acquired solely through the merits of SOZODONT, and not through schemes for buying the favor of those from whom a recommendation is expected to be real and unbiased.

We have declared SOZODONT to be an alkaline preparation, which utterly precludes the possibility of its being acid. And to make our argument the more forcible, we have offered $1,000 in gold to whomever could disprove our claim.

We now call your attention to another important fact. SOZODONT LIQUID is put up in transparent Flint Glass Bottles, there being nothing to hide from public inspection, no ingredients to deteriorate by coming in contact with the light, nor other reasons for the use of an opaque or china bottle for SOZODONT. Think this over very carefully.

When you purchase a dentifrice see what you are buying. Take our word for it that AN ACID DENTIFRICE IS THE TEETH'S WORST ENEMY. Test the dentifrice you are using. Do it now. Use litmus paper. The merest trace of acid will turn blue litmus paper pink. If this is the result of the test of your dentifrice, throw it away immediately. SOZODONT IN TRANSPARENT FLINT GLASS BOTTLES. Our other two popular styles are SOZODONT TOOTH POWDER and SOZODONT TOOTH PASTE. All absolutely free from Acid or Grit.

HOW GRAFT FLOURISHES IN THE MASSACHUSETTS LEGISLATURE; AN AMAZING EXPOSE BY A MEMBER

FORCES THAT WORK WHEN VOTES ARE NEEDED.

"COOLIDGE WRITES NOTE"
DIAGRAM SHOWING ROUTE TAKEN IN CARRYING NOTES,
HERE the MESSAGE was GIVEN TO A PAGE

The picture shows gallery in House of Representatives in which Counsel W. H. Coolidge of the Boston and Maine Railroad sat during debate on the "Merger Bill," sending frequent notes to "friends of the railroad." The large photograph is that of Attorney Coolidge and the other of Representative Robert Luce, who protests against the employment of improper influences.

President Lucius Tuttle's Attitude

"GRAFT! Let me tell you that there is not a cent of graft from the company I represent. Ten years ago Mr. Tuttle laid down the law on that subject. It is that not one cent can be expended to influence legislation. He stands by that statement to-day. The people know how his word is regarded in this community. If any money were paid, I'd have to pay it from my own pocket."—Statement by Lawyer William H. Coolidge, chief of counsel for the Boston & Maine Railroad.

By Clement L. Pollock.

Graft in the Legislature of Massachusetts that meets in the gold domed capitol on Beacon Hill? It has been so charged openly. Representative Robert Luce of Somerville, who stands for truth and righteousness in that body, declares that there is not more than one Judas in any twelve members. His talk about lobbyists in the Bay State Legislature is illuminating.

None the less interesting, emphatic and picturesque is the interview with W. H. Coolidge. He is chief counsel for the Boston & Maine railroad. He is "P. H." Coolidge, the famous Harvard baseball captain. It was charged that he "directed" legislation from his seat in the gallery on the railroad merger bill. He says that he wishes he were able to direct legislation—but he isn't.

Mr. Luce is a busy man. Besides representing his constituents in the Legislature, he [illegible] his business at No. 68 Devonshire street. I found him in his office. He is a well set up man. He is also exceedingly courteous. He is one of the [illegible] members of the House. He has a brown moustache, closely trimmed. His jaw is square. When he [illegible] is deliberate. He would hesitate before saying a hard word against anybody. He does not go around looking for [illegible] among his acquaintances. He's optimist. On Friday, in the House, he [illegible]

Mr. Luce Explains

"There is grave reason to apprehend [illegible] the roll call on the merger [illegible] Wednesday influences were exercised [illegible] not for the best interests of [illegible]."

Representative J. P. Downey of Cambridge [illegible] with a direct charge of [illegible] he was called to order by the [illegible]. It seemed proper that Mr. Luce [illegible] more parliamentary language [illegible] over the same idea. In view of [illegible] I asked Mr. Luce [illegible] used by the lobby to influence [illegible] in favor of the Boston & Maine [illegible].

"[illegible] will doubtless be impossible to prove," he said, "and when a thing cannot be proved the benefit of the doubt goes to the person or corporation under suspicion. What came to my knowledge was [illegible] the few minutes just before the roll call [illegible] Boston & Maine lobbyists were in consultation with various [illegible] and observers of the transactions made sundry charges. You will observe, therefore, that I kept strictly within the bounds of accuracy when I confined myself to averring that there were grave reasons to apprehend improper influence."

"Good Faith Expected."

"Was it difficult to ascertain the facts in such a case?"

"Because the transactions almost never have witnesses who can testify to their actual nature. Money rarely changes hands on the spot. Business men who have at times been approached with intimations that payment would be acceptable tell me the usual course is to agree that payment will be made after the passage of the bill. It is a transaction where good faith is expected."

"How much of this sort of thing is done?"

"Very little in the Massachusetts Legislature. Every year of my service has strengthened my belief that far the greater number of legislators are honest, upright men, who would not listen to a suggestion of graft. My own opinion is that the 280 men in the Senate and House average much higher in integrity than would 280 men taken at random in the business world.

"But in any group of 280 men there will be some who are weak, thoughtless, accustomed to look at public and private morals with different eyes. Among the twelve disciples there was one who was a knave. Possibly the same proportion, one in twelve, would hold in the case of an average Legislature. This particular Legislature, however, is above the average. All the men who have observed legislation for years agree that not in a long time has there been a Legislature so free from taint of corruption."

"If Somebody Isn't Fixed."

"Is vote buying the chief purpose of the lobby?"

"Far from it. Many of the lobbyists do not use money from one end of a session to the other. The most important work of a lobbyist is the perfectly legitimate work of watching affairs and informing his clients as to the progress of measures, and the opportunity for persuasion of a legitimate nature."

"Where, then, comes the danger of the lobby?"

"When a vote is likely to be close, when the honest men are nearly evenly divided in opinion, the small bunch of dishonorable men become of importance, and then the representative of some powerful and wealthy corporation is tempted to gain his point, swing the balance in his favor, by putting out cash. In ordinary sessions this happens rarely more than two or three times."

"Is it the case, then, that grafters who get elected to a Legislature have only two or three chances to make money improperly during a session?"

"No, the opportunity is continuous. It comes through the constant chance of preying on the fears of foolish business men who get imbued with the insane idea that all legislation must be bought or must be prevented by the use of money. These men will be notified by some middleman that some bill will be passed or will be defeated if somebody isn't fixed.

"What payment is made by the blackmailer often never reaches a legislator's pocket. The real grafter, not a member of the Legislature at all, keeps the cash. He may pretend to sell a vote when in fact he is trading on the knowledge of how a perfectly honest man intends to vote.

The Lobbyist's Opportunity.

"WHEN a vote is likely to be close, when the honest men are nearly evenly divided in opinion, the small bunch of dishonorable men become of importance and then the representative of some powerful and wealthy corporation is tempted to gain his point and swing the balance in his favor by putting out cash."—Statement by REPRESENTATIVE ROBERT LUCE, of Somerville.

Gullible Business Men.

"This sort of grafting, really by far the most considerable, reflects not in the slightest on the Legislature itself, but wholly on the gullible business men who lend themselves so easily to the schemes of the blackmailer."

"What corporations are most interested in legislation in this State?" I asked.

"Railways, telephones, gas and electricity," Mr. Luce replied.

"Do they begin to show their interest as early as the election of the members of the Legislature?"

"Well, in reply to that I can only say this: I know one big corporation of the State that is using its employes to influence the election of delegates to the next convention for the nomination of an Attorney-General. No, I am not in a position at present to tell what I know of this. But I am watching it."

"Whom do the corporations employ as lobbyists?"

"Lawyers. The plan of the campaigns are marked out by lawyers. These lawyers are called 'legislative counsel.' The most of them do perfectly legitimate work. Under them is the lobbyist proper. He is generally a former member of the Legislature who knows the ropes. He is a man of good address, a glib talker and one who knows just exactly where he can approach the body for results. He is a man who sees the members personally."

Few Legislators Drink.

"Where does he do it?"

"Usually in the corridors. The Senate allows free access to the corridors, the smoking room and on the floor, but not behind the rail. In Maine they are not so strict. When about twenty of us who were born in that State went to Augusta recently we found that the lobbyist could go in and sit by the side of any one whom he wished to approach. In the House there we found that the members had their women relatives and friends come in and sit beside them."

"How does the lobbyist spider approach his fly?"

"Well, before the opening of the Legislature the big men in the business send agents through the State to investigate the new members as to their taste, habits and so on. That is done to find out how they can most easily be approached. But there is very little drinking or dissipation of any character among the members of the Massachusetts Legislature. Two-thirds of the members go home every night. Few of them drink to any extent."

"Have you ever had any women lobbyists?"

"Never any that were paid lobbyists. We have had women at the State House who were interested in women's suffrage or in school matters, but I never knew of any women there who appeared for pay."

"Were you ever approached by a lobbyist, Mr. Luce?"

"I never was."

As to Railroad Passes.

"How about railroad passes in the Legislature?"

"None are accepted openly, and I do not think that they are accepted at all to any extent. There is, of course, a law against it."

W. H. Coolidge was in his office at No. 50 Congress street. [illegible] A Harvard graduate [illegible] famous ball team that won many glorious victories, he looks like an athlete now. He is of sturdy build, smooth faced and full of action. In his hair there is a little gray [illegible] W. [illegible] Keeler [illegible]

[illegible] I was in the gallery on Friday, as they say. Will you please tell me if there is any other [illegible] there?"

"I wrote notes, yes. They were to the friends of [illegible] party [illegible] give facts about [illegible] statements [illegible]. They say I directed [illegible]. I wish I could. I [illegible] power to direct legislation [illegible] of Massachusetts. That would be a great power. But it would be impossible for me to direct legislation there.

"Yes, I was [illegible] I saw some of my friends there. So did Mr. Luce. Why shouldn't I? A subject that was of great interest to our railroad was at stake, and I was there to look after it."

"What about the charge of graft, Mr. Coolidge?"

Mr. Coolidge jumped to his feet as though he were making a dash to first on a bunt. He was thoroughly in earnest. This is what he said:

"Graft! Let me tell you that there is not a cent of graft from the company that I represent. Ten years ago Mr. Tuttle laid down the law on that subject. It is that not one cent can be spent to influence legislation. He stands by that statement to-day. The people know how his word is regarded in the community. If any money were paid I'd have to pay it out of my own pocket."

Mr. Coolidge sat down. He did not in the least look worried about the situation. He reiterated that he had told me the facts.

"Why," he said with a smile, "we did not have to use any influence even if it were needed. It was not our bill. It was the bill of the State Railroad Commissioners. It was reported unanimously by the committee. We had nothing to do about it. We wanted it passed, for it gave us the rights that are enjoyed by other railroads, but there was no necessity for any 'graft' in connection with the measure."

WOMEN IN MOVE FOR PUBLIC OWNERSHIP.

Their Interest Encourages Leaders of Campaign to Secure for the People the Control of the Great Civic Utilities

Although the committee appointed at a recent mass meeting to prepare plans for a public ownership campaign in this State has not completed its work, in response to the demands from all [illegible] it was decided to hold another meeting this afternoon in Arcade Hall, No. 7 Park square.

Eminent speakers, including the Rev. J. A. Sayles of New York, editor of "What's the Use," will deliver appropriate addresses.

The fact that women are taking an interest in the movement was indicated by the presence of several at the meeting a week ago.

"We hope more will come to-day," said Secretary W. P. Burnell to a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter. "We want the women with us, for while they cannot vote, they have a good influence and can render valuable assistance in the work of advancing the doctrine of public ownership."

To Leave Nothing Undone.

Chairman E. C. Marshall of the committee that is preparing the plan of organization is desirous that [illegible] organizations believing in public ownership principles, and desiring to co-operate in the campaign, shall send their names to him, Box 47, Back Bay Postoffice.

"The committee is not ready to report," said Mr. Marshall. "We are going over the ground carefully, as we desire to submit a plan of organization and campaign to the meeting which will leave nothing undone and will bring the movement before the public on a sound basis.

"Public ownership of public utilities is but justice to the people, who are partners in the corporate enterprises that use their streets and their civic organization to draw money from them by daily tribute through generations.

"Justice is that immutable principle that bars no man from what he should enjoy, deprives no man of that which is his own and renders unto every man that which is his rightful due. So what we desire as advocates of public ownership is simply justice to the citizens of our State."

"Problem in Mathematics."

W. P. Burnell, secretary of the Massachusetts Democratic League, who is taking an active part in the public ownership campaign, gives a striking illustration of the accumulating power of wealth in the following "Problem in Mathematics," which he has written for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN:

"Have you ever taken the pains to figure out the value of one cent after it has been rolling up interest for a long number of years? One cent placed at interest at four per cent compounded annually [illegible] in 1900 years amount to [illegible] all the wealth of America [illegible] many and France [illegible] would be enough left to buy [illegible] and China and every part of Russia [illegible] less than two hundred and fifty [illegible] of dollars would be [illegible].

"John D. Rockefeller, who is said to be nearly a billionaire, or to have almost enough to buy all the city of Boston, will not live, nor will his son live many years; but if the system under which we are working remains, how long will it be [illegible] the greatest [illegible] of the future [illegible] will have [illegible] enough to buy the city of Boston [illegible] the whole country."

GANZEL GRIEVES FOR JOHNNY CLARKSON.

Famous [illegible] Catcher Saddened [illegible] the Great Boston Pitcher Has Had to Be Sent to a Sanitarium

[illegible] sanitarium. It seems hard [illegible] the man whom I consider [illegible] greatest [illegible] a sanitarium [illegible]

Charley Ganzel, one of the most famous baseball catchers of the '80s, said this last night to a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter when visited at his home, No. 12 Sea View avenue, Malden, and told of the removal of John Clarkson, the great $10,000 Boston National League pitcher, to a sanitarium at Flint, Mich.

"[illegible] always goodnatured, never kicking at decisions of umpires, no matter how unfair they might be, and always a gentleman,—that was Johnny Clarkson," continued Ganzel. "There are some so-called great pitchers to-day, but Clarkson was THE pitcher of his time and had no equal.

Twenty Successive Games.

"He was in his prime in 1889 and pitched his best ball [illegible]. At one time during the season [illegible] performed the [illegible] twenty successive games, day in and day out, and won the majority of [illegible]. That year the Boston [illegible] lost the pennant at the hands of New York by just one game. But it was not Clarkson's fault.

"With Charley [illegible] going into business for himself [illegible] and going through life with both [illegible] off, as a result of a railway wreck [illegible] Clarkson during that great season of '89. Charles Radbourne, formerly of the Providence team, was the other star pitcher of the team, and he was second only to Clarkson.

"Bennett and myself caught those two men throughout that season and I never found a better man to get [illegible] with than old Johnny Clarkson. Michael J. Sullivan, now a member of the Governor's Council, was a [illegible] that year.

"I cannot believe that Johnny Clarkson is beyond care. From what I knew of him [illegible] relatives say, that he has gone on his own accord to a [illegible] I hope that is the truth of the matter."

Ganzel's Great Record.

Charlie Ganzel was as famous in his day as a catcher as was John Clarkson as a pitcher. Ganzel came to Boston to join the National League team after his famous season of '87, when as a member of the famous "Pretzel" battery of Getzein and Ganzel of the Detroit team he gained a national [illegible] equal to [illegible] baseball Ganzel [illegible] Malden. He has [illegible] fittings for a [illegible] as his appointment [illegible] Board of Aldermen.

[illegible] from baseball in 1883. After five remarkable years on the Chicago team he joined the Boston Nationals in 1888, $10,000 being paid for his release. He remained here until 1892. He won two pennants for Chicago and [illegible] with the narrow [illegible] third pennant in '89. Since [illegible] he has made his home in Bay City, Mich.

COLLINS WILL RUN LEADERS ARE CONVINCED.

That Mayor Collins will be a candidate for re-election, and that the Democratic organization of the city is shaping its plans with that understanding, is the statement of men who are in close touch with the situation in this city.

The Mayor has not declared himself a candidate. It is not expected that he will do so. Such a course would be at variance with Mayor Collins's views of propriety. Although three times a candidate, he has never declared himself a candidate. At the appropriate time he acceded to the request of his party.

That this is the situation is attested by such party leaders as President W. T. A. Fitzgerald of the City Committee, James Donovan, Joseph J. Corbett, P. J. Kennedy, Charles S. Sullivan, secretary of the City Committee, and William J. Power, treasurer of the City Committee.

Summarized, this is the situation of the organization. It is not worrying over present conditions. It has no Spring booms to cultivate. It will start no campaign before Fall, the usual time for such a movement.

Should Mayor Collins decide not to accept the nomination it is believed that a likely candidate for organization support would be City Clerk Edward J. Donovan. Mr. Donovan, although a resident of Ward 23, has been for years intimately connected with the politics of the central part of the city. He has been the president of the Hendricks Club of Ward 8 and has been an active lieutenant of Martin M. Lomasney.

CRANE HAS ALL THE REPUBLICANS GUESSING.

How does Senator Crane stand? That is the question the Republican politicians are asking one another when discussing the Lieutenant Governorship. It seems to be taken for granted now at the party headquarters and the other places where the party leaders gather for counsel and gossip that Lieutenant Governor Curtis Guild, Jr., will be the Republican candidate for Governor. All calculations for the balance of next Fall's ticket are being based on that assumption.

While ex-Governor Bates has not formally said that he will not be a candidate again for the first place on the ticket, he is on record as having said that he could not imagine a condition of political affairs that would induce him to again enter the running. The drift of the last few weeks among the leaders who take a large hand in shaping political slates for the Republicans is strongly and steadily away from him and toward Mr. Guild.

The fact that Attorney General Parker has decisively taken himself out of consideration helps to blaze the way for Mr. Guild's promotion.

Gratefully yours, MRS. A. L. WALKER [illegible]

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for many kinds of diseases, and if permitted to continue, much suffering with fatal results are sure to follow. Kidney trouble irritates the nerves, makes you dizzy, restless, sleepless and irritable. Makes you pass water often during the day and obliges you to get up many times during the night. Unhealthy kidneys cause rheumatism, gravel, catarrh of the bladder, pain or dull ache in the back, joints and muscles; make your head ache and back ache, cause indigestion, stomach and liver trouble, you get a sallow, yellow complexion, make you feel as though you had heart trouble; you may have plenty of ambition, but no strength; get weak and waste away.

How to Find Out.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick dust settling, or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy for kidney, liver and bladder troubles.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

FAIR PLAINTIFF WISHES TO LISTEN TO NO FLATTERY

Miss Dorothy Eembridge of Hancock Street Sues B. & M. Man for $10,000 for Breach of Promise.

"No flattery wanted here," is a sign that Miss Dorothy Bembridge, of No. 12 Hancock street, the stenographer who has brought suit against Martin Mooney, the Boston & Maine freight clerk, for $10,000 for alleged breach of promise might display in regard to herself. She declares the newspapers have said things about her which were not true.

[illegible] asked a reporter for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

"Oh, they said [illegible] flattering things [illegible] books," said Miss Dorothy with a little pout. "They said I was pretty and all [illegible] and I [illegible]"

"And you don't think any paper ought to say that?"

"I don't want to be flattered," demurred Miss Dorothy.

Maybe a girl who's suing a man for breaking his betrothal vow, as Miss Bembridge declares in her [illegible] of complaint, has had enough flattery from her erst while suitor to last her for a long time. Anyway, no flatterers, representing Dan Cupid or newspapers need apply at No. 12 Hancock street, West End.

Miss Bembridge says that Mr. Mooney did propose marriage.

"Why, we were to be married on June [illegible] and [illegible] home all fixed," she added [illegible]

"I am twenty-five years old and have known Mr. Mooney for ten years. Three weeks before New Year's he asked me to marry him."

"Well, I kept him waiting three weeks. But on January 4 I did tell him I would marry him. And we made our plans accordingly."

"What happened then?"

"Well, about seven weeks later Martin was to [illegible] and he didn't and I wrote and asked him about it and he got mad, I suppose, for on St. Valentine's day of [illegible] I received a letter from him telling me we could no longer be even friends, or words to that effect."

Marriage Dream Over.

It seems, Miss Bembridge went on to explain, that this alleged letter from Mooney was very curt, only four lines. The freight clerk took about the same space to tell the astounded girl that her marriage dream was at an end as would have been required for him to write a receipt for a carload of pork.

The upshot of it is that Attorney W. [illegible] of No. 2[illegible] Court street has filed suit in $10,000 against Mooney and has attached Mooney's deposit in the Five Cents Savings Bank to cover it. Mooney who denies the al[illegible] has retained Attorney Francis M[illegible] of North Cambridge to conduct the case.

Letter to Mrs. J. W. Gray, Rich Suicide in New York

Dearest Brownie: I cannot tell you how I have missed you. All the time you have been travelling away from me I have been following your train with a railroad map, so that every minute of the day I could know exactly where you were.

You know that when you met me I was on the downward path and that through your loving kindness and goodness you saved me as others have failed to do. I shall never forget all you have done for me, and I shall always try to show you how deeply I appreciate your tenderness and loving kindness to me.

With the help of God I shall try to live a better and a truer life and show you that my ambitions, both socially and financially, are far higher than you, even you, suspect.

I send you a whole heart full of love and devotion, and that means a great deal. Lovingly, CHARLIE.

MRS. GRAY RICH, MYSTERY AS TO HER IDENTITY

New Orleans, May 6.—Mrs. Ollie Gray was a native of New Orleans and was considered a beautiful type of woman. She was a tall stately woman, and when she left New Orleans [illegible] for New York [illegible] the best of health and was enjoying life [illegible] to its fullest extent.

She was well to do, having inherited [illegible] wealth from her husband, J. W. Gray [illegible] in Chicago some years ago, and the woman had nothing to want [illegible] affection of the man [illegible] were addressed. She possessed [illegible] of diamonds and jewelry [illegible] relatives [illegible] magnificent wardrobe and [illegible]

It was [illegible] to find out anything about the maiden identity of Mrs. Gray. One of her relatives here is Olivia Parker, who lives in a little cottage here at 1,923 St. Andrew street. From the Parker woman practically nothing could be learned. She refused to give the maiden name of Mrs. Gray, but declared that she was a native of New Orleans and that she was reared in the [illegible] Convent. Fifteen [illegible] J. W. Gray, of Chicago, to whom she was married in that city.

LIVED IN NORTH.

Since her marriage she had lived entirely in the North, coming here rarely except since the death of her husband. Mr. Gray was a wealthy broker and upon his death left his handsome widow splendidly equipped financially. At the opening of last Winter Mrs. Gray moved to New Orleans [illegible] Winter here and left for New York [illegible] in New York.

Mrs. Gray and Mrs. Parker [illegible] city [illegible] relatives [illegible] prostrated with [illegible] was manifestly heartbroken over the news and anxiously inquired after the body and diamonds and jewelry which Mrs. Gray had on her person or in her room.

"Oh, why did she do it?" moaned the woman. "She had so much to live for. Beautiful, lovely and in the best of health. I don't see how she could do it. It is terrible. Only on Easter I had a beautiful letter from her. She was full of life."

Although Mrs. Gray stated in one of her letters that she had no relatives, this woman seen at No. 1,723 St. Andrew street admitted that she was a relative of the deceased. According to Olivia Parker, the woman was between thirty and thirty-two years old.

Mrs. Parker evidently had some knowledge of the affair between Stoneham and Mrs. Gray. She would, however, not talk on this subject. She said that Mr. Stoneham was a man of means, and that if he was not to be found in New York he might possibly be located in Jersey City.

She would not, however, give her reasons for believing that Stoneham lived in Jersey City. Mrs. Parker said this morning that Stoneham has never been to New Orleans, nor did she care to go into details about how the relationship between him and Mrs. Gray sprung up. They evidently met in the North during Mrs. Gray's travels.

PRESIDENT STARTS ON HOMEWARD JOURNEY.

Glenwood Springs, Col., May 6.—President Roosevelt, Dr. Lambert and Phil B. Stewart rode into town shortly after 3 o'clock to-day in the hunting garb they have worn since they went out from New Castle on April 15 to start on the trip home. The President showed the effect of his outing in the heightened color of his cheeks and in the lessened girth of his waist, and it is beyond question that he has greatly profited physically from his hunt.

Directly after their arrival the three went down to the vapor baths, where they spent an hour and a half. Meanwhile the townspeople were firing away upon the mountain sides salutes of exploding dynamite sticks, and to-night the peaks surrounding the town are lighted with blazing tar barrels.

The President to-night addressed the hundreds assembled. He said in brief that he wished to tell them that he was more than ever impressed with the necessity for government aid in the irrigation of western lands.

CRUELEST MAN IN CHICAGO.

Chicago, May 6.—Casper Gretch was described by Judge Fitzgerald as the "cruelest man in Chicago." Gretch was arrested on complaint of his wife, Mary, who lives at 4608 Wood street. The woman declared that her husband returned home and demanded money, and when she refused him threw her over a stove.

VASSAR RACES WON BY WAVERLEY GIRL

Miss Pauline Knickerbocker Angell of Waverley carried off the honors for her class, '08, in the annual field day exercises at Vassar College yesterday, according to dispatches to the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

Miss Angell almost smashed the record in the 100-yard dash, finishing in 13 2, one second behind the college record that has stood for several years. She also won the 50-yard dash in 7 1 seconds.

One new record for the college was established when Miss Caroline Sellers Barnes, '05, of Philadelphia, won the 100-yard hurdle in 17 1 seconds.

NOTICE!

"E. C. Gedney, Division Manager, Atlantic Fruit Co., Young's Hotel, Boston Mass.:—

"Referring to the article which I am informed has to-day appeared in the Boston News Bureau stating in substance that the Atlantic Fruit Co. would soon cease doing business in Boston; that the company received only a small proportion of its original capital stock subscription in cash and that its bank account in Boston has been attached, I would say this article is a trick of the trade, inspired by persons who desire to have the impression get abroad that this company is not going to hold the Boston banana field.

"It is a gross misrepresentation from start to finish, as investigation will prove. The company has no intention of quitting any market that it has opened. There has been no attachment made upon the company's money in any bank, the misrepresentation in this direction evidently arising from the fact that a man by the name of Newhouse, who was formerly with the United Fruit Co., has filed a suit which the company is defending.

"The company is on a good foundation, and the increase of the capital stock, from $250,000 to $1,000,000, is for the purpose of taking care of our increased business. Such reports, emanating from the source from which they come, appear unmistakably inspired, and considering their source are unworthy of credence.

Pe-ru-na's Popularity.

Catarrh is almost universal. Catarrh is difficult to cure. The doctors do not always recognize catarrh. It therefore follows that when a remedy is [illegible] that can be used by any one in the home [illegible] a moderate cost, such a remedy should inevitably become popular.

A SHORT HISTORY OF PE-RU-NA.

THE remedy, Peruna, is in reality a very old remedy. The basis for the formula by which Peruna is made first appeared in "Doctor Beech's Family Medicine," which was published more than [illegible] years ago.

The formula was then known as the Neutralizing Mixture. Dr. Beech's Family Medicine was [illegible] extensively used among a [illegible] sect in Southern Pennsylvania known as the Mennonites.

It [illegible] Dr. Hartman [illegible] others besides the Mennonites might derive its benefits. After considerable modification of the formula and perfection of its pharmaceutical qualities, he finally succeeded in establishing the remedy under the trade name of "Pe-ru-na."

At first, the Doctor prescribed it only for his regular patients, but very soon the demand became so great for Peruna that he was obliged to establish a manufactory devoted exclusively to its [illegible].

The story of its growth [illegible] reads like a romance. When [illegible] the people began to find out its true merits, its popularity became phenomenal. Never before in the history of medicine has a remedy become so universally recognized and so widely used.

There is no other medicine in the world that commands such vast [illegible], and there is no other remedy that can furnish such a host of testimonials from [illegible] of people.

Rev. Robert W. Plant Indicted with Head of Diocese as Result of Complaint Made by a Prominent Citizen of Camden

Rockland, May 6.—Indictment of Bishop Codman of the Episcopal diocese of Maine and of the Rev. Robert W. Plant of [illegible] Church on the charge of criminal libel against W. Howard Gardiner of Camden, who has two sons in Boston, is the greatest church sensation Maine has known for many years. Now it appears that Bishop Codman will stand trial on the indictment. Mr. Gardiner has said that he would withdraw his complaint if the Bishop would apologize, but the Bishop has shown no desire to do this.

The indictment against Bishop Codman and Rev. Mr. Plant is the result of the [illegible] reading of a letter in which Mr. Gardiner states he was [illegible] as a heathen [illegible] who had been excommunicated from the church [illegible] to be ostracised, avoided and shunned, in the language of the [illegible]. Besides the criminal action Mr. Gardiner has also instituted civil [illegible] redress for the alleged libel.

Mr. Gardiner Explains.

Mr. Gardiner has made a statement to the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN in which he explains the suits and the criminal [illegible]. He says:

"My ancestors, as far back as my great [illegible] Sylvester Gardiner [illegible] in the year 17[illegible] and endowed [illegible] St. John's [illegible] Church at Gardiner [illegible] in existence in [illegible].

Mr. Plant Chosen Rector.

[illegible] Mr. Plant was elected [illegible] and drew [illegible] In the latter [illegible] with his [illegible] Mr. Plant [illegible] the offertory [illegible] without my knowledge made [illegible] with the [illegible]

Indictment of Bishop Codman and the Rev. Robert W. Plant

*" * * * The following false, scandalous and defamatory and libellous words were there published and read by said (Rev.) Robert W. Plant, by request and direction of said Robert (Bishop) Codman, of and concerning the character and standing of him, said William H. Gardiner, as a member of St. John's parish, to wit:*

"William H. Gardiner, of Camden, has been publicly excommunicated from the church by the bishop, and that he, the said William H. Gardiner, should be taken by the whole membership of said church as a heathen and one to be ostracised and avoided and shunned, to the great damage of him, said William H. Gardiner, in the county of Knox, State of Maine, as against the peace of the State of Maine and county, to the form of the statutes in such case made and provided.

"A true bill."

I took it down and asked the justice of the peace to recall it, which, after consulting Mr. Plant, was done.

Asked for Copy of Letter.

[illegible] Mr. Plant had made [illegible] Mount Desert where the Bishop was [illegible] meeting and obtained [illegible] this was read [illegible] in September [illegible] some 200 people present at the [illegible] the words [illegible] statement of Bishop Codman read by Mr. Plant are what [illegible] of the trouble. [illegible] asked in writing for a copy of the letter of the bishop read before the gathering, but have never been able to obtain it, either from the bishop or Mr. Plant, and I believe it has been destroyed.

[illegible] imagine [illegible] Bishop inventing a [illegible] the words spoken by Mr. Plant [illegible] crowd of people at that [illegible] to have been written [illegible] bishop of the diocese to him was [illegible]

[illegible] have [illegible] in this country against both of these gentlemen, which will come to trial next September. I have learned that Mr. Plant has gone to Canada. Now I should think with an indictment hanging over him he would stay at home.

Mr. Gardiner's two sons, J. P. and William H. Gardiner, Jr., are both well-known Boston men.

STANDARD OIL MEN INDICTED IN ILLINOIS.

Grand Jury at Pekin Finds True Bills Against Vice-President Collings and Assistant District Manager Taylor

BY F. S. MONNETT.

Columbus, O., May 6.—[illegible] Kercher of this city, a former Standard Oil Company employe, was [illegible] the grand jury at [illegible] Ill., and has returned [illegible]. As a result of his testimony [illegible] W. B. Cooney, an attorney of Pekin, and [illegible] and F. Hamsuit, two Standard Oil officers, were indicted.

Mr. Kercher is at present one of the managers of the Pure Oil Company of this city. He relates the following incident that led to the indictment of [illegible] Collings, the vice-president of the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, [illegible] general manager of [illegible] Cincinnati, O., and of G. W. Taylor, one of the district managers of the Standard Oil Company.

"While I was one of the special agents of the Standard Oil Company [illegible] and assigned to duty [illegible] Illinois," he said, "[illegible] vice-president, and G. A. Taylor, one of the district managers, sent me to various stations to investigate competition, to offer and suggest methods of meeting the competition and to carry out their orders to destroy competition.

To Drive Out Competition.

"During the year 1901 the [illegible] Refining Company of [illegible] through the Royal Oil Company of Pekin, Ill., [illegible] established a good business in wholesale and retail [illegible] the Standard Oil [illegible] F. Hamsuit [illegible] the local man in charge of the wholesale and retail branches of the company's [illegible] business.

"I was ordered there the latter part of 1901 with orders to install a [illegible] a horse and wagon, under [illegible] independent to drive out the [illegible] I provided him with a [illegible] which was [illegible] of the Cincinnati [illegible] employes. I was in constant [illegible] with their office [illegible] street for a part of the business [illegible] made private reports [illegible] of another part of the business to G. W. Taylor, sending the mail to [illegible] Glendale, Ohio, a suburb of Cincinnati. He answered it from their office on Walnut street.

Kept Employer Secret.

"It was my business then to keep my relationship with the Standard Oil Company as secret as possible from outsiders and at all times from the public. The particular wagon that was used at Pekin was purchased by me for the Standard at Springfield, Ill., some six months prior to the date I shipped it to Mr. Stout at Pekin.

"I brought Mr. Thomas from Terre Haute, Ind., to succeed Mr. Stout, who was not capable of meeting this fierce competition. Mr. Thomas was an expert in this line of work and the Standard [illegible] Mr. Hamsuit to run him out of business or whip him into line as they could. In order to assist Thomas in his work, the Standard furnished another man by the name of Sparks, of Jeffersonville, Ind., who spied out the customers for Hamsuit, giving names and addresses to Thomas.

"Mr. Kercher had instructions from the Standard Oil Company at Cincinnati to furnish the cash to Thomas to drive out competition. This is designated by them as a 'wagon fund.' Mr. Thomas was [illegible] the oil [illegible] at the Standard Oil station and sell it regardless of cost until he would bankrupt the Royal Oil Company [illegible] recognized methods.

Turned on Standard.

"Before Thomas completed his infamous job, and in the absence of Mr. Kercher, he became corrupt and disloyal to the Standard, and, inasmuch as he had held out that he was an independent and sold on [illegible] wagon, which cost $[illegible].

"In order to [illegible] Hamsuit further, Kercher was [illegible] to replevin the wagon at [illegible] the [illegible] up Mr. Insley of Peoria, [illegible] special agent of the Standard Oil Company for that territory, to get further instructions and he was advised to employ one Jesse Black, a prominent attorney of Pekin, to bring a replevin suit to recover the wagon from Hamsuit."

UNREST SHAKES CONFIDENCE OF BULLS.

Stock Market Outlook Doubtful at Present—Good Sized Short Interest, But Up, May Use It to Lift Prices

WELL ORGANIZED BEAR PARTY SHOWN TO EXIST

One Wants to Assist Favorable Operators and Influential Engaged to Bring About Serious Reactions

BOTH BULLS AND BEARS ARE NERVOUS.

New York, May 6.—Operations in the stock market prove that both the bulls and bears are nervous and uncertain of their positions. The short interest is large enough to furnish basis for a material rise, but the bulls lack the courage to bring matters to a crisis. The bears, on the other hand, seem to be afraid to push their advantage.

The result was shown in a dead market yesterday, only a few more than 300,000 shares being dealt in. The Saturday session of the previous week saw transactions in more than 1,000,000 shares. The week's close indicated nothing more than that the market was tired out with the violent liquidation and the raiding and desperate rallying movements which have characterized it. It acted yesterday almost like a market that had been through a panic. The few stocks that showed any vitality at all had remarkable reasons for moving. The spirit of speculation seemed to be utterly dead.

With money so cheap and with conditions of trade so good, it is not likely that any more raiding of importance will be seen. The short interest in a few stocks is so large that some very sharp movements upward may be expected even while the list is drifting. The fact must not be lost sight of that the great public which makes the volume of big bull markets has not been in stocks extensively, and has not been hurt in the decline. Therefore, there is abundant material for a big market this Summer, and bankers of stability claim that such a market will come.

The speculative pace was slower yesterday than it was [illegible] the market was [illegible] for the day [illegible] however [illegible] shape of [illegible] ment was [illegible]

Harriman was permitted to put through [illegible] an issue of $100,000,000 4 per cent preferred stock at the stockholders' meeting the other day.

No one on the outside appears to know just what will be done with this big issue of stock. A [illegible] made formal application at the meeting for information on this point, but there is no record that his desire was granted.

FORM DEPARTMENT STORE MUTUAL HELP UNION.

Rev. Herbert Johnson Helps Organization of Body for Improving the Conditions of Workers in the Big Stores

The Department Store Help Mutual Union, an organization with the object of bettering the conditions under which men and women are employed in the stores of Boston, was organized yesterday, with the Rev. Herbert S. Johnson, pastor of the Warren Avenue Baptist Church as president, and Robert Grant, formerly employed by the Gilchrist Company, as business agent and secretary.

The objects of the new union as laid down in the formal announcement of its organization are as follows:

Objects of Union.

1—To better the working conditions of department store help.

2—To urge store proprietors to institute and encourage the serving of regular apprenticeships.

4—To urge employers to discontinue employing married women, except in time of widowhood, husband's sickness or absolute necessity.

8—To open a free employment agency for department store help.

(1) Ordinary members—Store help sixteen years of age and over: men 15 cents monthly, women 10 cents monthly.

(2) Honary members—Store proprietors, superintendents and buyers, fee two dollars ($2) per year.

Not a Trade Union.

"Already we have secured many unknown members," said Secretary Grant yesterday afternoon at the headquarters of the Union at Room 505, No. 6 Beacon street.

"We want the public to clearly understand that this is not a trade union which we have organized, but simply an association of clerks and store proprietors to better the conditions under which men and women in the stores are forced to work."

SET BED ON FIRE AND IMEERILLED MANY LIVES.

Seven-Year-Old Malden Boy, Playing with Matches, Caused a Blaze Which Put Brothers and Sisters in Danger

Little Alexander Bernstein, the seven-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Bernstein, of No. Gordon street, Malden, likes to play with fire and yesterday, for the third time in a few months, set a blaze at his home which imperilled the lives of the inmates of the house. He set fire to some bed clothes in an attic room and then came near being burned to death himself by crawling under the blazing bed.

Little Alexander was playing on the floor of the room with his brothers and sisters, Gertrude, Tina, Louis and a three months old baby, when he found some matches and amused himself by lighting them. Then he touched the coverlet of the bed and the bed clothes were quickly on fire. The other children became frightened and rushed from the room carrying the baby with them and screaming for their mother, who arrived just in time to save little Alexander from being burned.

HYDE MEN TO FORCE ALEXANDER FROM EQUITABLE.

New York, May 6.—To discuss ways and means and, if possible, force the resignation of James W. Alexander as president and George T. Tarbell as second vice-president, the directors of the Equitable Life Assurance Society will meet for an "informal conference" Monday. This is done at the request of one director who believes that the easiest way to end the society's disease is by the board giving expression to their opinions.

The director who called the "informal conference" is an ardent supporter of Mr. Hyde. The Hyde faction is now determined to force the issue and retaliate by this means upon Messrs. Alexander and Tarbell, who secretly called the recent convention of the society's managers and general agents.

QUITS CAMBRIDGE HEALTH BOARD

Ernest W. Clark has sent in his resignation as a member of the Cambridge Board of Health. Mayor Augustine J. Daly, to whom Clark's letter of resignation was addressed, refused to make it public. It is known, however, that his resignation is due to his disagreement with Charles T. Weeks, chairman of the board, and John J. Scott, a member.

Clark's resignation was accepted at once.

It is believed that Clark's resignation will clear up the muddle in the affairs of the Cambridge Board of Health. Mayor Daly has requested the resignation of both Weeks and Scott.

BOSTON TRAIN HAS NARROW ESCAPE FROM WRECK.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New Rochelle, May 6.—The Colonial Express, bound from Boston to Washington, which passes through New Rochelle shortly after 2 o'clock, just barely escaped crashing into the Saturday extra, which left New York at 1.30 o'clock, at the New Rochelle Junction of the Harlem Branch and the main line of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad. It is said that the engineer of the main line local ran by the signal, causing his engine to jump the switch which was set for the Colonial Express.

Within a minute after the local jumped the switch the Colonial came crashing along at the rate of forty miles an hour, and was switched from the main line tracks to the branch road. The derailed engine of the local train, which was crowded with suburbanites, was within twenty feet of the express when it whistled by. No one was hurt. Traffic on the main line and branch was delayed for two hours.

LYNN WAITRESSES FIND MRS. WYMAN DETERMINED.

Keeper of Big Restaurants an Obstacle to Victory of the Strikers—Says Demands Are Too High—Small Men Yield

Lynn, May 6.—The strike of the waitresses in the restaurants continues. A number of proprietors of the smaller restaurants have acceded to the demands of the strikers, but there seems little likelihood of a complete restoration of the normal conditions inside of a week.

Mrs. Adelaide Wyman, a woman of sixty years, who succeeded her husband in the operation of a number of the largest restaurants in this city, stands between the waitresses and victory. She is determined to hold out, unless the strikers are willing to have the matter placed before the State Board of Arbitration, which they do not seem to be willing to do.

"It is not a question of will or won't in adopting the union schedule," said Mrs. Wyman to a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter, "but rather a question of financial impossibility. The demand for increase is decidedly too much."

At the present time there are about sixty men and women out of employment owing to the strike.

The operatives in the shoe shops have blacklisted the restaurants that are holding out. In addition to this they have promised financial support to the strikers if [illegible].

CITY TO ENTERTAIN PRESIDENT IN JUNE

As President Roosevelt is to be the guest of various New England colleges when he tours the State in the latter part of June, it is not anticipated that there will be any State demonstration.

It is probable that the city will officially recognize the presence of the chief executive when he passes through on his way to the exercises at Harvard.

Worcester, where the President attends the exercises of the graduating classes of Clark University and Holy Cross College, is to have the biggest time that can be arranged by the citizens.

CAPT. R. P. HOBSON IS TO BE WED ON MAY 25.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, May 6. The announcement made to-day by Mr. and Mrs. George Hull of Tuxedo Park of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Griseda Houston Hull, to Captain Richmond Pearson Hobson, is the culmination of an interesting romance.

The marriage will be solemnized on May 25 at the home of the bride's parents in Tuxedo. Only relatives and a few intimate friends will be present.

Miss Hull, on her father's side, is related to the Hulls, Strongs, Farnhams and Bassetts of New England, and through her mother, who was Miss Lucia Houston, daughter of Judge Russel Houston of Kentucky, related to some of the finest families in the South. She is the grand niece of Governor Houston of Alabama.

Captain Hobson is also of famous ancestry, both South and North.

FOUND DEAD WITH POISON BOTTLE BY HIS SIDE.

The dead body of a man supposed to be R. F. Wright, of Needham or Andover, was found last evening in a room which the man had engaged in "The Sleeper," a lodging house at No. 13½ Howard street. The police believe it a case of suicide, as a bottle which had contained cyanide of potassium was found by the side of the body. A superficial examination in Briggs's undertaking rooms tended to confirm the belief.

The man had been accustomed to register at "The Sleeper" whenever he came to Boston during the past seven or eight years. From his conversation it was supposed that he was a beef buyer. He went to the lodging house yesterday morning and seemed cheerful. A man who talked with him told the clerk that Wright said he formerly lived in Andover, but had moved to Needham. A card bearing the name R. F. Wright was found in his pocket.

The body is that of a man about forty-five years old, 5 feet 11 inches in height and of light complexion.

His Mother Tells Sunday American of Boy's Interest in "Florodora" Girl's Case.

"If I had had Nan Patterson's jury I would be at home to-day," declared Charles Louis Tucker, convicted of the murder of Mabel Page, to his mother yesterday when she visited him in the East Cambridge jail.

Mrs. Tucker paid an extra call to her son yesterday to give him tidings of his grandmother's serious illness. The poor old lady, now in her eightieth year, is lying at the point of death and there is no hope of her recovery.

Since her grandson's arrest she has been to see him but once, and it was a serious tax upon her feeble strength. It has been her fondest hope that she would live to see him freed and at home.

Now she knows that she will never see him again.

Aside from his grandmother's illness, the Patterson trial occupied much of the conversation yesterday between Tucker and his mother. Mrs. Tucker kindly consented to give her son's views of the trial of the pretty "Florodora" girl to the BOSTON AMERICAN.

By Mrs. Lucy A. Tucker.

Louis has been most interested in Nan Patterson's case ever since she was arrested.

He has felt a great sympathy for her because he knows what he has had to suffer during his imprisonment and trial.

He does not believe that Nan Patterson is guilty. At the same time he cannot but feel how much stronger the evidence presented against her seemed than in his own case.

"I Cannot Understand It."

She was in the [illegible] when "Caesar" Young was shot. In his own case, he was not in the Page house nor near it.

"Mamma," he said, "if I had had Nan Patterson's jury I would be at home to-day. If Nan Patterson goes free I do not see why I should not be free. I can't understand it."

Of course Louis does not have the daily papers, but he has followed the case closely in the Sunday papers, and has been most interested in the poor girl. Her release has given him hope when he gets his next trial.

There could never be another jury like the one that convicted him. We all feel that.

"I know so well what Nan Patterson has suffered," he said, "in her long wait and in the anxiety for the verdict. Only a person who has waited for the decision of a jury knows what the suspense and [illegible]

He is very much grieved over his grandmother's illness, for he is very fond of her. It seems so hard that he cannot see her.

SAYS YOUNG HELD REVOLVER HIMSELF

New York, May 6.—Dr. Philip F. O'Hanlon, coroner's physician, who performed the autopsy on the body of Caesar Young, and who was a principal witness for the prosecution at the trial of Nan Patterson, made the admission this afternoon that he has been of the opinion from the first that Young held in his own hand the revolver with which he was shot.

A group of coroner's physicians, newspaper men and others, including Dr. O'Hanlon, were discussing the case when he made this statement.

He said:

"Now that the trial is over, I am free to confess that my opinion has been all along that 'Caesar' Young held the gun in his own hand when the shot was fired."

In view of the conspicuous part played by Dr. O'Hanlon in the Nan Patterson trial this statement was received with surprise. A reporter said:

"Do you mean to say, Dr. O'Hanlon, that you have reverted to your first theory that Young committed suicide?"

"I will say no more," said Dr. O'Hanlon. "I have expressed my opinion."

At the trial of Nan Patterson Dr. O'Hanlon admitted that he reported the shooting of Caesar Young as a case of suicide after he had performed the autopsy. He said, however, that his opinion had changed since, but he did not state definitely the manner in which his investigation led him to believe Young had been shot.

Although it is admitted that Nan Patterson is to be freed on bail and there is no question that she can raise bail to any amount up to $50,000 the young woman must remain in the Tombs until Assistant District Attorney Rand, her prosecutor, can be found, and it was said to-day that she could not expect to be freed from prison for several days.

"What are your plans for the future?" was asked Nan Patterson to-day.

"I have none at present," she replied. "Julia and I will go at once to Washington. I want to get away from this dreadful place—they have been awfully kind to me here in the Tombs though—and in the quiet of my home try and forget for a while the memories of the past.

"But I can't afford to remain idle, and there is only one thing I can do, and—and—that's the stage," she added with hesitancy.

THE SECRET OUT

Truth is Unshackled

To refute the many false and malicious attacks, bogus formula and other untruthful statements published concerning Dr. Pierce's world-famed family medicines, the Doctor has decided to publish all the ingredients entering into his "Favorite Prescription" for women and his equally popular tonic alterative known as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Hereafter every bottle of these medicines, leaving the great laboratory at Buffalo, will bear upon it a full list of all the ingredients entering into the compound. Both are made entirely from native roots, barks and herbs. The ingredients of the Golden Medical Discovery being Golden Seal, Queen's root, Stone root, Wild-cherry bark, Mandrake and Bloodroot. The "Favorite Prescription" is prepared in a similar manner from Blue Cohosh, Lady's Slipper, Unicorn root, Golden Seal and Rattleweed root, these ingredients being macerated for a long time in a non-alcoholic menstruum. The exact working formula for making these medicines cost Dr. Pierce and his collaborating Chemist and Pharmacist many years of study and experiments, but as perfected they produce almost perfect pharmaceutical compounds embodying all the active, medicinal principles residing in the ingredients employed, and this, too, in such form and combination as to keep unchanged in any climate. Thus the use of alcohol is entirely avoided in their manufacture, and instead an agent is employed which possesses valuable medicinal properties, being a demulcent, anti-ferment and nutrient.

PROOF POSITIVE.

Without solicitation, Mrs. H. Harrison, of 112 West 2d St., Sioux City, Iowa, wrote us as follows:

"I suffered for more than seven years with a very complicated form of female trouble accompanied with nervous prostration, and after doctoring with six physicians, all of excellent reputation, I was told that unless an operation was performed I would be an invalid all my life. Hearing of the wonderful cures effected by Dr. R. V. Pierce's remedies and believing that there must be a cure for almost every ailment, I determined to make one more effort. I wrote to Dr. Pierce, and I will never forget his kindly advice, telling me to follow his instructions faithfully and not to submit to an operation. I commenced to improve after six weeks' treatment, and in five months my improvement was so noticeable to friends that they began to inquire about my method of treatment. I was pleased to tell them of the wonderful means of cure that I had most fortunately found, and, as so many ladies applied to me for information regarding Dr. Pierce's world-famed medicines and his plans of treatment, I felt in duty bound to give them the benefit of my experience, so, told them the facts. The large number of positive cures effected by Dr. Pierce's remedies alone, used by my recommendation, seemed, in one year's time, nothing short of a miracle. I couldn't have believed it had I not seen the parties and known the facts."

"I was afflicted for more than seven years with pelvic trouble, which developed into kidney and bladder disorder," writes Mr. Ernest Rappold, Chairman Executive Committee, Western Industrial League, of 230 West First Street, Los Angeles, California. "I could pass water only with difficulty, water was dark and cloudy, my whole system out of order, and severe backache and headache was my daily portion. Finally, I was unable to continue my work and things looked pretty dark in the home with me, without work, and no money to fall back on. My employer, whom I had just left, called to see me while in bed, and he spoke so highly of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery that I decided to try it. Within two weeks I felt much better, could begin to relish my food, and my aches and pains grew less. I kept up the medicine for ten weeks, when I was cured and again able to return to work. This was over seventeen months ago, and I have not lost a day's work since.

"My wife had ovarian trouble and ulceration of the womb, and she was cured through the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, so you see, my home, which was once desolate and dark because of sickness, is to-day bright and cheery, and we both give thanks to your grand remedies, which brought us that grandest of all human blessings—health."

MASTERS IN OCCULTISM CALL HER A PRETENDER

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Calcutta, May 6.—The leading Hindu thinkers are organizing for the purpose of driving Theosophy from the stronghold it has began to obtain in Hindustan.

These leaders point out that Theosophy is almost entirely the creation of women, who have built upon the sacred writings of the Hindus a fabric of fiction, myth and mystery as a means of gaining money and reputation.

Annie Besant, the successor to Mme. Blavatsky, has established herself boldly in the religious centre of the Hindus, and has built up a college for the development of her personal doctrines.

She wears the Hindu dress, eats only food cooked by Brahmins, announces that she was a Brahmin in a previous incarnation, and walks the streets of Benares counting her beads, surrounded by young and interesting people of both sexes.

India is a tranquil place, where religions of various kinds are always welcome, but Mrs. Besant has gone a step too far.

She now announces that the religion revealed to her predecessor, Mme. Blavatsky, is the oldest religion in the world, and precedes the Vedas, the sacred writings of the Hindus.

This has brought forth an organization under the authority of Agamya Guru Paramahansa, the Tiger Mahatma of India, the objects of which are to counteract Besant's influence.

Mrs. Besant has claimed to possess occult powers. The native masters of occultism have asked her to prove it, and they also declare that she knows neither Hindu nor Sanscrit.

Theosophy has pictured the Mahatmas to the Western world under the guise of jugglers and charlatans, stooping to perform low tricks to deceive the ignorant, and this organization of Hindu thinkers is sending Indian teachers abroad to explain to Theosophists the world over how wretchedly they have been deceived.

MISS IVY LENNOX TO BE WEDDED ON AMERICAN LINES.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, May 6.—Lady Algernon Gordon Lennox has told her friends that the American society girl impressed her more than ever during her recent stay in New York. The straightforward, easy manner of the younger girls when confronted with strangers, more especially men, was in marked contrast, she thinks, to the shy and awkward manner of many London debutantes.

Lady Algernon is cultivating in her daughter, Miss Ivy Gordon Lennox, the same fearlessness, and this young girl is expected to be very much in evidence during the season. Miss Ivy already had the advantage of being privately presented to Queen Alexandra when Her Majesty was on the royal yacht at Gibraltar recently.

Lady Algernon has now persuaded her socialist sister, the Duchess of Sutherland, to give a ball at Stafford House in honor of her debutante niece and this function will be the most brilliant event of the season.

Stafford House, which for many years past has been given up to charity concerts and bazaars, has not been the scene of private hospitality on a really big scale since the famous Harriet, Duchess of Sutherland, one of Queen Victoria's bosom friends, reigned there in state.

The present Duchess does not care for London entertaining and prefers her northern castles. Stafford House has the biggest salon and the most stately rooms of any house in London, and the marble staircase is even more valuable than the celebrated [illegible] in Mrs. John Mackay's house in Carlton House Terrace.

WIDOW OF SERGIUS WAS TRICKED BY POLICE.

Instead of a Pathetic Interview with Assassin of Her Husband in the Cell, She Talked with Police Officer

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Odessa, May 6.—Some time ago the papers of Europe were telling with many details a story of a most touching meeting in a prison cell between Grand Duchess Elizabeth, the widow of the assassinated Grand Duke Sergius, and her husband's murderer.

It was told how the noble woman, whom the Russian people adore as much as they hated her late husband, forgave the murderer, and having given him a holy ikon, promised to intercede in his behalf with the Czar to spare his life.

It seems a pity to destroy this sympathetic story, but the AMERICAN correspondent is told by a high Russian official that the Grand Duchess really never met the murderer.

When she was led into the cell the prisoner's place had been taken by a police official who played the part of the penitent murderer with [illegible]. When the authorities learned of this [illegible] played upon the Grand Duchess the official was discharged in disgrace, although he claimed to have been forced to deceive the Grand Duchess [illegible] insisted on an interview alone with the assassin who would not promise not to attempt to harm her.

The Grand Duchess herself, who had spent hours every day praying for the soul [illegible] of the [illegible] that the man who had thus deceived her should be discharged.

KING WANTS TO SEE GHASTLY WAR PICTURES.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, May 6.—King Edward, through his private secretary, Lord Knollys, has been in correspondence about the work of an enterprising American photographer, Mr. Urban, although the latter may not yet be aware of the fact. Mr. Urban, whose series of animated photographs known as "Urbanora," has been a great success at the Alhambra Theatre, has, through his agents, obtained exclusive and wonderful animated photographs of the Russo-Japanese war, beginning with the Russian journey from Moscow to Harbin and ending with painfully realistic scenes at the siege of Port Arthur.

The photographs were only allowed to be shown in [illegible] on condition that the Japanese Legation should see them first, which they did the other day. Several repulsive pictures showing heaps of dead have been [illegible].

King Edward as soon as he heard of the pictures was most anxious to have a private view of the [illegible] scenes, so Lord Knollys wrote to a [illegible] agent and asked whether the pictures were all genuine or faked.

Having received a satisfactory reply, [illegible] with the King, [illegible] there will be a private royal exhibition [illegible] before the public [illegible] a chance of seeing these gruesome views.

EXPLORER BRINGS SIX PIGMIES FROM AFRICA.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Cairo, May 6.—Colonel Harrison, the well-known explorer, has just arrived here, bringing with him six pigmies from the Ituri Forest, generally known as the Stanley Forest (Congo Free State). The little people, four of whom are men and two women, are all between eighteen and thirty four years of age, and their height is from 3 feet 8 inches to 4 feet 6 inches.

They came of their own free will, and will proceed to London. The pigmies are still fairly numerous and live on the outskirts of the great forest, rarely penetrating into its interior except for purposes of concealment.

The Colonel found them quite friendly when he had once gained their confidence, but a week before he left they attacked a caravan belonging to the Congo Government, killing seventeen porters and escaping into the depths of the forest.

The [illegible] are of a [illegible] disposition [illegible] in small villages, each [illegible] of structures of [illegible] houses [illegible]. The pigmies wear [illegible]. The maximum age [illegible] years.

THE PETER MARTINS A DELIGHT TO PARIS

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, May 6.—Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin of San Francisco are startling the good Parisians by their lavish display.

Mrs. Martin, who was Miss [illegible] of Newport, Rhode Island, while shopping at the Bon Marche the other day was followed about by a wondering crowd. Like a queen [illegible] flowers in a garden she sauntered through the shops pointing to the objects which took her fancy, saying "I'll take that and that and that," and so on, till in the space of ten minutes she had purchased many thousand francs worth of goods.

The Peter Martins drive in the Bois every day behind a pair of high stepping steeds in a swagger turnout.

YANKEE DIPLOMAT MADE BY HIS COOK

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, May 6.—The little dinners given by Major Beacom, the military attache at the American Embassy, at his flat in Curzon street, Mayfair, are becoming celebrated. The secret of their success lies in the art of his Franco-Spanish cook housekeeper, a woman of marvelous resource, whom the Major brought home from the Philippines. This "treasure" looks after the Major in the most faithful manner, besides inventing new dishes for his guests.

The flat is beautifully furnished, the Stars and Stripes adorns the vestibule and there are many trophies from the Philippines, where Major Beacom saw a good deal of active service.

IRISH GUARDS' BAND NOT TO VISIT N. Y.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, May 6.—There is much discontent among the men of the Irish Guards Band who are going to Toronto for the Exhibition this summer.

The War Office authorities have refused to allow them to leave Canadian territory, although the band has been offered several splendid engagements in New York, Chicago and other great cities.

HARVARD BOYS TOO FAST FOR COLUMBIA

The gridiron inside the Harvard Stadium presented a very lively sight yesterday afternoon when the association football teams of Harvard and Columbia were fighting it out for intercollegiate supremacy in the famous English sport. The opposing teams were arrayed in the multicolored uniforms customary in England, the blouses striped a la jockey fashion, Harvard crimson and black and Columbia blue and white, the Harvard men with their red stockings and Columbia with the light blue. This, with the open and dashing play of the game, was a distinct relief to the American accustomed to the dirt and line plunging of our game of football.

The Crimson players won the contest by two goals to one. The game was closely contested all the way through and the best that has been played on Soldiers Field. Osborne for Harvard was a central figure in all the play. Harvard's second goal was the result of a long run up the field by [illegible] Green, with the latter doing some very pretty dribbling. The summary:

SCHOOLBOYS ARE PROTESTED AT YALE GAMES.

Charges Made That Several Exceeded the Age Limit, and Disqualifications Give Honors to Hill School of Pottstown, Pa.

Special to the Sunday American.

New Haven, May 6.—In the closest Yale interscholastic track meet ever held, the Hill School of Pottstown, Pa., landed first place this afternoon after a competition by twenty schools. Its nearest rival was Worcester Academy, which had twenty-four and one-half points. Mercersburg Academy of Mercersburg, Pa., was third, with twenty; the Lawrenceville School fourth, with fifteen and one-half, and St. Paul's School of Garden City, Long Island, fifth, with eleven. The other points were scattered.

A number of protests have been raised, alleging that several athletes are suspected of having violated the age limit of twenty-one years for the association.

Two Records Broken.

W. K. Sheppard of the Brown Preparatory School at Philadelphia won the half mile and mile runs, breaking the record in both events and giving Worcester the meet, twenty-two and one-half points to seventeen, but after the meet was over it was decided that he was over the age limit and his points were thrown out, changing the result of the meet.

One record was broken by Risley of Mercersburg Academy, who jumped twenty-two feet six inches in the broad event. Captain John W. Mayhew of the Worcester Academy team was the individual star of the meet. He won the 120-yard hurdle and the furlong flat race and divided second place in the broad jump, taking twelve and one-half points alone. He competed in five events.

The Summary:

100-yard dash—Won by J. A. Rector, Lawrenceville School. Time—10 1-5 sec. Second, E. C. Joseph, St. Paul's School; third, L. M. Butler, Hill School; fourth, J. R. King, Jr., Worcester Academy.

ROUGH LACROSSE GAME IS WON BY THE HARVARD TWELVE

Harvard and Columbia waged a bloody battle on Soldiers Field yesterday afternoon with big lacrosse sticks, [illegible] and sometimes a hard rubber sphere and sometimes each other's head for the ball.

At the end of fifty minutes of warfare, Harvard had scored eight points with the ball while the Blue and White had only managed to corral one goal.

Roseben Finished First in the Classic Toboggan

Special to the Sunday American.

Belmont Race Track, L. I., May 6.—Old timers were reminded of the halcyon days at Morris Park to-day on inspecting the race bill here. Not fewer than 15,000 persons swung through the turnstiles before bugle call for the opening handicap sprint.

In the opening handicap for three year olds and upward, at six furlongs, the talent encountered an upset which it didn't relish. This was the winning of Irene Lindsey, a 5 to 1 shot. Lyne put up a nice ride and won, going away in a drive from Cairngorm, the 8 to 5 favorite, with [illegible] back, the 9 to 5 second [illegible] third.

Madden's "Good Thing."

The second race for two-year-olds at 4½ furlongs, saw the first of John E. Madden's annual Spring "good things" in the two-year-old go down to dismal failure. This was Plaudit filly Comedienne. She went to the post a 6 to 5 favorite. Here Sydney Paget again showed to the fore, for his Canopus filly, Andria, at 3 to 1, won in a drive from Comedienne right on the post with Stalactical, at 15 to 1, third.

The Boquet selling stakes, for two-year-olds, at five furlongs, instituted in 1896 and won in its first running by J. E. McDonald's Albanian, went to Anodyne. She ruled at 6 to 1 choice. R. T. Wilson, Jr., started two, Gallavant ran second while Leonard Joe Hayman, at 3 to 1 was third. It was a nose finish between the first two, with Hayman just a nod away.

Roseben's Handicap.

Davy Johnson's Roseben backed from 10 to 1 to 6 to 1, won the Toboggan handicap for three-year-olds and upwards at six furlongs on the straight away in handy fashion from Sparkling Star, at 15 to 1, with Pasadena, at 6 to 1, third. James R. Keene's Israelite, at 4 to 1 was the first choice, with Woodsaw at 5 to 1, a well fancied second choice. Roseben led all the way, and after shaking off successively [illegible] Sparkling Star won driving at the end by a good length.

The Results:

FIRST RACE—Handicap, three-year-olds and upwards, six furlongs. Irene Lindsey, 124 (Lyne), [illegible] to 2 and 7 to 5, won; Cairngorm, 112 (W. Davis), 17 to 10 and 1 to 2, second; Eyebright, 114 [illegible] 2 to 1 and 4 to 5, third. Time [illegible] Cederstrome, Duke of Kendall and [illegible] also ran.

SECOND RACE—Two-year-olds, four and one-half furlongs, straight. Andria [illegible] 4 to 1 and 6 to 5, won; Comedienne [illegible] 3 to 5, second; Stalactical, 114 (Lyne?), 25 to 1 and 8 to 1, third. Time—[illegible] 54 1-5s. Sir Brinkley, Cinna, Palero and Olive [illegible] also ran.

THIRD RACE—The Boquet selling, two-year-olds, five furlongs, straight. Anodyne, 94 [illegible], 6 to 1 and 2 to 1, won; Gallavant, 104 [illegible], Hildebrand, 3 to 1 and even, second; L. J. Hayman, 99 (Miller), 3 to 1 and even, third. Time, 1:01. [illegible]

FOURTH RACE—The Toboggan handicap, for three-year [illegible] Roseben, 112 [illegible] Sparkling Star, 87 [illegible] 20 to 1 and 8 to 1, second; Pasadena, 105 [illegible] Time, 1.11. Water [illegible] Woodsaw [illegible] also ran.

FIFTH RACE—Steeplechase, for 4-year-olds and upward, about two miles. Flying Virginia, 146 [illegible] 6 to 5, won; [illegible] Mr. Page, 139 [illegible] 10 to 1 and 4 to 1, second; Mr. [illegible] Perrine, 146 (Kelly), 6 to 1 and 2 to 1, third. Time—4.06. Messina also ran. Gladwin, Imperialist, [illegible] and Garter, Jimmie Lane, Sandhurst [illegible] Mickey Dwyer refused.

ATHLETICS 2; WASH. 1.

Special to the Sunday American.

Washington, May 6.—Plank and Hughes had a great battle to-day, the former doing the best work and the Athletics defeated the Senators, 2 to 1. Hughes's base on balls to Hoffman in the last inning resulted in the winning run crossing the plate.

The locals went the route without a [illegible] up in fielding, while Cross's wild throw on Cassidy's roller resulted in the Senators' [illegible] Double plays by Davis and Cross and Kittredge, Cassidy and Stahl were the features. Nearly 10,000 people packed the stands and surrounded the outfield, all hits being limited to doubles on account of ground rules. The score:

THERE'S NOTHING WRONG WITH THE CHAMPION BOSTON BASEBALL TEAM

BY A. H. C. MITCHELL

During the first two weeks of the championship season [illegible] question, "What is the matter with [illegible]?" [illegible] would have [illegible] the management or the owner of the world's [illegible] their destinies.

Perhaps it was thought I had misrepresented things when I wired from day to day the progress of the team. Maybe it was thought I exaggerated when I telegraphed that the men, with two or three exceptions, were in a [illegible] condition and were ready for the pennant [illegible] But I did not misrepresent [illegible]

Poor Batting the Cause.

It will doubtless be recalled that I frequently called attention [illegible] batting of the team as a whole [illegible] think is the secret of the whole business, the reason for the [illegible] champions.

One doesn't hear the question [illegible] the Bostons [illegible] now. In fact [illegible] New York [illegible]

[illegible]

As a matter of fact [illegible] the Bostons [illegible]

Steady and Game.

[illegible]

Strengthened by Grimshaw.

Grimshaw [illegible] only improves the [illegible] strengthens the team. He has displayed nervousness at the bat on home grounds, but doubtless will soon work out of that, and we may expect him [illegible]

[illegible]

Ten Per Cent Stronger

It will [illegible] that the champions [illegible] were last year [illegible] stronger. Take [illegible] the last three games Uncle Cy Young has [illegible] equal to or [illegible] the heavy hitters plug along, and as a rule one year's average will not be far from what it was in years gone by.

Record Month for Fires.

More [illegible] in Boston last month than during any month in the history of the city. The firebug was responsible for this unenviable record.

There were 202 bell alarms, 152 still alarms and thirteen automatic alarms in April. Previous to last month the greatest month for fires was July, 1903, when there were 180 [illegible] alarms, but a large number of these resulted from fireworks on the Fourth of July.

Under orders of the Superintendent of Police every bluecoat in Boston is to-day looking for a man who may have some connection with the many fires. A letter was read yesterday at every station house [illegible]

CANTABRIGIANS WILL DISCUSS SUBWAY.

Mass Meeting of Cambridge Citizens Called to Devise Action in View of Refusal of the Elevated to Co-operate

HOPE FOR SOLUTION OF KNOTTY PROBLEM

Cambridge citizens determined that there shall not be an elevated structure through the streets of the University City and equally determined that if they have a subway it shall be owned eventually by the city, have taken up the fight against the Boston Elevated. In a mass meeting, which will be held to-morrow evening in Citizens Trade Association Hall, there will be put before the people the great question of rapid transit and how it can be accomplished without the corporation securing everything that it demands.

As the matter stands at present Mayor Daly, the City Council and the Rapid Transit Committee have failed in their efforts to have the Boston Elevated agree to join in a petition to the Legislature for the repeal of that portion of the charter granted in 1891 which compels the Elevated to build an overhead structure through Cambridge.

"We must build an elevated structure, the law says we must," declared the spokesman for the Elevated.

"But consider a subway, it would save [illegible] and it would [illegible] overhead structure [illegible]

[illegible] subway that we have on the elevated [illegible] asked by the Elevated people.

"No, we can't do that, but we will give you a long lease. The city must own the subway eventually."

LIVELY TIME AT STATE HOUSE IN PROSPECT.

Senate to Be Occupied This Week with Contention of Interests Seeking to Build the Boston-Providence Line

GAS BILL AND RESOLVE COMING UP IN HOUSE

There is prospect of a lively time in the Massachusetts Senate the coming week. Matters of vital interest affecting street railways are on the calendar.

The general bill, giving any street railway the right to take land by eminent domain in the construction of lines, will be strongly supported and bitterly fought. The report accompanying the bill rebuked the efforts of lobbyists to influence the action of the committee and the principle was enunciated that no company should be given exclusively the right of eminent domain.

The report is a slap at the Kidder-Peabody combination, with whom are joined the Shaw-Powers-Gaston and the Blood companies, and also at the Stone-Webster Company, seeking rights for the construction of lines between Boston and Providence.

The legislative week just finished was the most stirring of the session in the House. Matters of absorbing interest were up for consideration every day, the principal reports of the year were submitted, and the debate at times reached the highest pitch of excitement, the climax coming on the last day, when Representative Robert Luce of Somerville paid his respects to the lobby and Representative J. F. Downey declaimed on the floor of the House that it was his belief "graft" was being used to promote the "merger" bill.

To-morrow the gas bill and resolve will be taken up for discussion in the House on the question of passing them to a third reading. That there will be a sharp debate is a matter of course.

LABOR TROUBLES IN PROVIDENCE UNIONS

Providence, May 6.—Nearly thirty coal handlers, some of whom were brought here from Boston to take the places of strikers from the yards of the Eastern Coal Company, have quit work and promised to join the local union.

The master plumbers have flatly refused to treat with the plumbers who have demanded $4.50 per day, or to recognize apprentices who want their pay increased from $1.50 to $3.50.

SOMERVILLE CITIZENS INCENSED OVER GARBAGE PLANT NEAR MAGOUN SQUARE; MEETING IS CALLED

ORDER PASSED BY SOMERVILLE ALDERMEN

"Voted, that the citizens protesting against the location of the city garbage plant at the city yard, be given a public hearing by the Board of Aldermen on Thursday evening, May 11, at 7:30 o'clock."—Order passed at the meeting of the Somerville Board of Aldermen at last meeting.

MAYOR ACCUSED OF DISCRIMINATING IN MATTER.

Odors that are far from pleasing have caused the residents in the vicinity of Magoun square, Somerville, to arise in their might and sniff the air with indignation. The city garbage plant, now that the sunshine of Spring has begun to fall upon it, is the cause of their olfactory dissatisfaction.

It will all come out at a meeting of citizens before the City Council next Thursday, in City Hall. Many of the citizens want the plant removed from its location. The Mayor and certain members of the Board of Aldermen come in for a share of criticism because of the location of the plant in the heart of the most populated section of the city.

2,000 in Vicinity.

Over 2,000 persons reside in the immediate vicinity of the plant, while two public schools, which over 1,100 pupils attend, are within a short distance of it. The protesting residents chose the following committee to represent them: John P. Burke, chairman; John Hayden, Frank Lynch, C. W. Ross and J. J. Cody. They are engaged in raising funds and stirring up public sentiment.

William Middlestack, of Berwick street, whose house overlooks the obnoxious garbage plant, said:

"It is an outrage to put the garbage plant here, in the midst of a thickly settled locality; in fact, the densest population of any section of the city.

"The plant heretofore has been on the marsh over at the Mystic River, where the tide flowed in twice a day and washed away the debris, thus doing away to a greater or less extent with the terrible odor. But Mayor Chandler last year promised the members of a swell social club on Winter Hill, who objected to the carting of refuse through that section of the city, that he would do away with the plant.

"In order to accomodate these rich people he took the present opportunity to foist the plant and nuisance into our section. When the lease ran out with Contractor Pond the City Council allowed $500 for a new site for the garbage plant, and when we learned that it was to be located in our midst we went to the Mayor.

Scores the Mayor.

"The Mayor stated that a suitable site could not be procured under $600, and we promptly agreed to furnish the extra $100 by subscription; but he was determined to infringe on us and our rights. At present the offal is being dumped in the temporary garbage shed, where it is not connected with the sewer system, and the city teams hauling it are not properly cleansed.

"It was the Mayor's suggestion that the garbage plant be located in our section, because of a little scheme he had with a contractor in Arlington. Their proposition was to have a spur track run from the Boston & Maine railroad into the city yard, where the teams could load the garbage on the cars and they then be freighted to Arlington, but this scheme was knocked in the head by the Board of Aldermen, led by Alderman Higgins, who declared that if the city was to own a garbage plant it should sell at retail to any and all farmers and not to some particular one.

"We have within a stone's throw of the garbage two public schools, one of which, the Brown Primary School, had to be closed on account of the fear of spotted fever.

"I am in favor of securing an injunction from the courts if we cannot stop the nuisance any other way.

"Would Be on City Land."

"The city owns land out on the Arlington line, removed from the city proper and in a sparsely settled residential district. The plant should be located there or on some of the hundred of acres of marsh land along the Mystic River. I believe the BOSTON AMERICAN will receive the heartfelt thanks of our community if it will only give the publication that is deserving of this infringement of the people's rights."

George H. Murray, another abutting property holder, is incensed over placing the garbage plant in its present location.

"It is a crying shame," he said, "the manner in which the poorer, though respectable, citizens of this city are treated by the powers that be in city government. Cleanliness is next to godliness, yet they have the supreme effrontery to locate that pest shed right in our midst, where the odors which are bound to emanate during the Summer months will spread disease among the hundreds of children and inhabitants of this section.

"Along the Mystic River on the flats there is ample room for such a plant, instead of placing a disease-factory in our section. Something must be done to rid the community of it."

MAINE SHERIFF TO RETURN SEIZED LIQUORS.

Court Holds Seizure of City Agency Stock, Valued at $2,500, Illegal—Sheriff Is Finding Work Discouraging

Rockland, Me., May 6.—An order for the return of the city liquor agency stock valued at $2,500, which was seized by Sheriff A. J. Tolman, April 5, was served upon the sheriff to-day by Judge L. R. Campbell of the Municipal Court.

Judge Campbell ordered the return of the liquors to the agency within forty-eight hours. "You are further notified," the order read, "that the warrant upon which the seizure was made has been dismissed, and the seizure is held to be illegal and not justified by law."

The order is said to have occasioned a vigorous discussion, in the course of which Sheriff Tolman is quoted as saying that his work of enforcement has been very discouraging. He said he should not return the liquor in the time specified.

The order for the return of the patent medicines seized from the wholesale grocery store of Cobb, Wight & Co. was honored. Governor William T. Cobb was in his store when the medicine was returned.

INSANE MAN ON CAR CAUSES PANIC

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, May 6.—Bookmaker James J. Quinn, one of the best known members of the Metropolitan Turf Association, became insane to-day in an Eighth avenue trolley car.

He created a panic among the women in the car by running up and down, shouting, "Colonial Girl wins! They're off, see them run!"

Policeman Vantelburgh succeeded in handcuffing Quinn, and in a patrol wagon he was taken to Bellevue Hospital. On the way, at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street and Seventh avenue, he jumped from the wagon and he and five policemen rolled about in the roadway for several minutes before he was overpowered.

"CROESUS" TAKES UP POOR BOY'S BURDEN

Kenosha, Wis., May 6.—The early risers in Kenosha on a recent morning had the unique experience of seeing a multi-millionaire broker and manufacturer taking the end of a clothes basket through the main street of the city, while a ragged urchin carried the other end of the basket.

The multi-millionaire was Z. G. Simmons and the urchin was Leo Burrick. Mr. Simmons met the boy in Central Park, and he was carrying a basket of clothes weighing forty pounds. Mr. Simmons took one end of the basket and the two carried it to the nearest carriage shop, where the manufacturer purchased for the boy the best pushcart that the man had in stock.

$100 DAMAGES FOR SHOCK OF A KISS

Cincinnati, May 2.—Mrs. Berta Mitts, a handsome woman of Williamstown, Ky., was given judgment for $100 damages in the Covington Federal Court for one kiss that was stolen from her by Dr. J. B. Alexander, of McPherson, Kansas, who was formerly the Mitts's family physician. Mrs. Mitts asked for $20,000 and told the court she was confined to her room for weeks because of the nervous shock that followed the doctor's advances.

The doctor testified that out in Kansas he sometimes kissed twenty or thirty women on leaving home and not one of them thought anything of it.

Providence, May 6.—The Seekonk and Ten Mile Rivers and the woods adjoining were thoroughly searched again to-day for some trace of George D.
